1. To feel uneasiness, mortification, or discontent, at the sight of superior excellence, reputation, or happiness enjoyed by another; to repine at another's prosperity; to fret or grieve one's self at the real or supposed superiority of another, and to hate him on that account.

Envy not thou the oppressor. — Prov. iii.
Whoever envies another, confesses his superiority. Rambler.

2. To grudge; to withhold maliciously. Dryden.

To envy at, used by authors formerly, is now obsolete.

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked? Taylor.

EN'VY, n. Pain, uneasiness, mortification, or discontent excited by the sight of another's superiority or success, accompanied with some degree of hatred or malignity, and often or usually with a desire or an effort to depreciate the person, and with pleasure in seeing him depressed. Envy springs from pride, ambition, or love, mortified that another has obtained what one has a strong desire to possess.

Envy and admiration are the Scylla and Charybdis of authors. Pope.

All human virtue, to its latest breath,
Finds envy never conquered, but by death. Pope.

Emulation differs from envy, in not being accompanied with hatred, and a desire to depress a more fortunate person.

Envy, to which the ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learned or brave. Pope.

It is followed by of or to. They did this in envy of Cesar, or in envy to his genius. The former seems to be preferable.

2. Rivalry; competition. [Little used.] Dryden.

3. Malice; malignity.

You turn the good we offer into envy. Shak.

4. Public odium; ill repute; invidiousness.

E'QUAL-LY, adv. In the same degree with another; alike; as, to be equally taxed; to be equally virtuous or vicious; to be equally impatient, hungry, thirsty, swift, or slow; to be equally furnished.

2. In equal shares or proportions. The estate is to be equally divided among the heirs.

3. Impartially; with equal justice. Shak.

[Equally should not be followed by as, but by with.]

E'QUAL-NESS, n. Equality; a state of being equal. Shak.

2. Evenness; uniformity; as, the equalness of a surface.

E-QUAN''GU-LAR, (e-kwang'gu-lar,) a. [L. æquus and angulus.]

Consisting of equal angles. [See EQUIANGULAR, which is generally used.]

E-QUA-NIM'I-TY, n. [L. æquanimitas, æquus and animus, an equal mind.]

Evenness of mind; that calm temper or firmness of mind which is not easily elated or depressed, which sustains prosperity without excessive joy, and adversity without violent agitation of the passions or depression of spirits. The great man bears misfortunes with equanimity.

E-QUAN'I-MOUS, a. Of an even, composed frame of mind; of a steady temper; not easily elated or depressed.

E'QUANT, n. In the Ptolemaic system of astronomy, an imaginary circle, used for regulating and adjusting certain motions of the planets. Brande.

E-QUA'TION, n. [L. æquatio, from æquo, to make equal or level.]

1. Literally, a making equal, or an equal division.

2. In algebra, a proposition asserting the equality of two quantities, and expressed by the sign = between them; or an expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms; as, $3s. = 36d.$, or $x = b + m - r$. In the latter case, x is equal to b added to m, with r subtracted, and the quantities on the right hand of the sign of equation are said to be the value of x on the left hand. Encyc. Johnson.

3. In astronomy, equation of time, is the interval by which apparent time differs from mean time. Olmsted.

E-QUA'TOR, n. [L., from æquo, to make equal.]

In astronomy and geography, a great circle of the sphere, equally distant from the two poles of the world, or having the same poles as the world. It is called equator, because, when the sun is in it, the days and nights are of equal length; hence, it is called also the equinoctial, and, when drawn on maps, globes, and planispheres, it is called the equinoctial line, or simply the line. Every point in the equator is 90°, or a quadrant's distance, from the poles; hence, it divides the globe or sphere into two equal hemispheres, the northern and southern. The equator rises, at any given place, as much above the horizon as is equal to the complement of the latitude. Barlow.

E-QUA-TO'RI-AL, a. Pertaining to the equator; as, equatorial climates. The equatorial diameter of the earth is longer than the polar diameter.

E-QUA-TO'RI-AL, n. An astronomical instrument, with a telescope whose motion is on an axis parallel to the axis of the earth, and hence corresponding to the diurnal motion of the heavens from east to west, so that when a celestial object is once within the field of view of the telescope, it continues, while above the horizon, constantly in the field. Olmsted.

E-QUA-TO'RI-AL-LY, adv. So as to have the motion of an equatorial. P. Cyc.

E'QUE-RY, } n. [Fr. ecuyer, for escuyer; It. scudi-
E-QUER'RY, } ere; Low L. scutarius, from scutum, a shield. See ESQUIRE.]

1. An officer of nobles or princes, who has the care and management of their horses. In England, the equerries are five in number. They ride in the leading coach, on all great occasions, and have a table provided for them by themselves. Buchanan.

2. A large stable or lodge for horses.

E-QUES'TRI-AN, a. [L. equester, equestris, from equus, a horseman, from equus, a horse.]

1. Pertaining to horses or horsemanship; performed with horses; as, equestrian feats.

2. Being on horseback; as, an equestrian lady.

3. Skilled in horsemanship. [Spectator.

4. Representing a person on horseback; as, an equestrian statue.

5. Celebrated by horse-races; as, equestrian games, sports, or amusements.

6. Belonging to knights. Among the Romans, the equestrian order, was the order of knights, equites; also their troopers or horsemen in the field. In civil life, the knights stood contradistinguished from the senators; in the field, from the infantry. Encyc.

E-QUI-AN''GU-LAR, a. [L. æquus, equal, and angulus, an angle.]

In geometry, consisting of or having equal angles; an epithet given to figures whose angles are all equal, such as a square, an equilateral triangle, &c.

E-QUI-BAL'ANCE, n. [L. æquus and bilanx.]

Equal weight.

E-QUI-BAL'ANCE, v. t. To have equal weight with something. Ch. Relig. Appeal.

E-QUI-BAL'ANC-ED, (e-kwe-bal'anst,) pp. Giving equal weight.

E-QUI-BAL'ANC-ING, ppr. Having equal weight.

E-QUI-CRU'RAL, a. [L. æquus, equal, and crus, a leg.]

1. Having legs of equal length.

2. Having equal legs, but longer than the base; isosceles; as, an equicrural triangle. Johnson.

E-QUI-DIF'FER-ENT, a. Having equal differences; arithmetically proportional. Barlow.

2. In crystallography, having a different number of faces presented by the prism, and by each summit; and these three numbers form a series in arithmetical progression, as 6, 4, 2. Cleaveland.

E-QUI-DIS'TANCE, n. Equal distance. Hall.

E-QUI-DIS'TANT, a. [L. æquus, equal, and distans, distant.]

Being at an equal distance from some point or thing.

E'QUI-FORM, a. Having the same form. Humble.

E-QUI-FORM'I-TY, n. [L. æquus, equal, and forma, form.]

Uniform equality. Brown.

E-QUI-LAT'ER-AL, a. [L. æquus, equal, and lateralis, from latus, side.]

Having all the sides equal; as, an equilateral triangle. A square must necessarily be equilateral.

E-QUI-LAT'ER-AL, n. A side exactly corresponding to others. Herbert.

E QUI-LI'BRATE, v. t. [L. æquus and libro, to poise.]

To balance equally two scales, sides, or ends; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with water. Arbuthnot.

E QUI-LI'BRA-TED, pp. Balanced equally on both sides or ends.

E-QUI-LI'BRA-TING, ppr. Balancing equally on both sides or ends.

E-QUI-LI-BRA'TION, n. Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even, or the state of being equally balanced.

Nature's laws of equilibration. Derham.

E-QUI-LIB'RI-OUS, a. Equally poised

E-QUI-LIB'RI-OUS-LY, adv. In equal poise.

E-QUIL'I-BRIST, n. One who keeps his balance in unnatural positions and hazardous movements; a balancer. Encyc. Am.

E-QUI-LIB'RI-TY, n. [L. æquilibritas.]

The state of being equally balanced; equal balance on both sides; equilibrium; as, the theory of equilibrity. Gregory.

E-QUI-LIB'RI-UM, n. [L.] Equipoise; equality of weight or force; a state of rest produced by the mutual counteraction of two or more forces. P. Cyc.

2. A just poise or balance in respect to an object, so that it remains firm; as, to preserve the equilibrium of the body.

Health consists in the equilibrium between those two powers. Arbuthnot.

3. Equal balancing of the mind between motives or reasons; a state of indifference or of doubt, when the mind is suspended in indecision, between different motives, or the different forces of evidence.

In equilibrio; in a state of equilibrium.

E-QUI-MUL'TI-PLE, a. [L. æquus and multiplico, or multiplex.]

Multiplied by the same number or quantity.

E-QUI-MUL'TI-PLE, n. In arithmetic and geometry, a term applied to the products arising from the multiplication of two or more primitive quantities by the same number or quantity. Hence, equimultiples of any numbers or quantities are always in the same ratio to each other, as the simple numbers or quantities before multiplication. If 6 and 9 are multiplied by 4, the multiples, 24 and 36, will be to each other as 6 to 9. Barlow.

E'QUINE, }

Pertaining to a horse; denoting the horse kind. Haywood.

The shoulders, body, thighs, and mane are equine; the head completely bovine. Barrow's Travels.

E-QUI-NEC'ES-SA-RY, a. [L. æquus and necessary.]

Necessary or needful in the same degree. Hudibras.

E-QUI-NOC'TIAL, a. [L. æquus, equal, and nox, night.]

1. Pertaining to the equinoxes; designating an equal length of day and night; as, the equinoctial line.

2. Pertaining to the regions or climate of the equinoctial line or equator; in or near that line; as, equinoctial heat; an equinoctial sun; equinoctial wind.

3. Pertaining to the time when the sun enters the equinoctial points; as, an equinoctial gale or storm, which happens at or near the equinox, in any part of the world.

Equinoctial flowers; flowers that open at a regular, stated hour. Martyn.

Equinoctial points, are the two points wherein the celestial equator and ecliptic intersect each other; the one, being in the first point of Aries, is called the vernal point or equinox; the other, in the first point of Libra, the autumnal point or equinox. Barlow.

Equinoctial dial, is that whose plane lies parallel to the equinoctial. Barlow.

Equinoctial time, is reckoned from a fixed instant common to all the world.

E-QUI-NOC'TIAL, n. [For EQUINOCTIAL LINE.] In astronomy, the celestial equator. The intersection of the plane of the equator with the surface of the earth, constitutes the terrestrial equator, and with the concave surface of the heavens, the celestial equator, or equinoctial. When the sun, in its course through the ecliptic, comes to this circle, viz., about the 21st of March and 22d of September, it makes equal days and nights in all parts of the globe. Olmsted.

E'QUI-NOX, n. [L. æquus, equal, and nox, night.]

The precise time when the sun enters one of the equinoctial points, making the day and the night of equal length. The sun enters the first point of Aries about the 21st of March, and the first point of Libra about the 23d of September. These are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. These points are found to be moving backward, or westward, at the rate of 50″ of a degree in a year. This is called the precession of the equinoxes. Encyc.

E-QUI-NU'MER-ANT, a. [L. æquus, equal, and numerus, number.]

Having or consisting of the same number. [Little used.] Arbuthnot.

E-QUIP', v. t. [Fr. equiper; Arm. aqipa, aqipein; Sp. equipar; Ch. קפק, Aphel אקפק, to surround, to gird; perhaps the same root as Eth. ሐፈፈ (ሐፈፈ) to embrace.]

1. Properly, to dress; to furnish; as, to equip a person with a suit of clothes. Hence,

2. To furnish with arms, or a complete suit of arms, for military service. Thus we say, to equip men or troops for war; to equip a body of infantry or cavalry. But the word seems to include not only arms, but clothing, baggage, utensils, tents, and all the apparatus of an army, particularly when applied to a body of troops. Hence, to furnish with arms and warlike apparatus; as, to equip a regiment.

3. To furnish with men, artillery, and munitions of war, as a ship. Hence, in common language, to fit for sea; to furnish with whatever is necessary for a voyage.

Digitized by Google

EQ'UI-PAGE, (ek'we-paje,) n. The furniture of a military man, particularly arms and their appendages.

2. The furniture of an army or body of troops, infantry or cavalry, including arms, artillery, utensils, provisions, and whatever is necessary for a military expedition. Camp equipage includes tents, and every thing necessary for accommodation in camp. Field equipage consists of arms, artillery, wagons, tumbrils, &c.

3. The furniture of an armed ship, or the necessary preparations for a voyage; including cordage, spars, provisions, &c.

4. Attendance, retinue, as persons, horses, carriages, &c.; as, the equipage of a prince.

5. Carriage of state; vehicle; as, celestial equipage.

6. Accouterments; habiliments; ornamental furniture. Prior.

E-QUI-PEN'DEN-CY, n. [L. æquus, equal, and pendeo, to hang.]

The act of hanging in equipoise; a being not inclined or determined either way. South.

E-QUIP'MENT, n. The act of equipping, or fitting for a voyage or expedition.

2. Any thing that is used in equipping; furniture; habiliments; warlike apparatus; necessaries for an expedition or for a voyage; as, the equipments of a ship or an army.

3. In civil engineering, the necessary adjuncts of a railroad, as cars, locomotives, &c., are called the equipments.

Ē'QUI-POISE, n. [L. æquus, equal, and Fr. poids, or rather W. pwys, weight. See POISE.]

Equality of weight or force; hence, equilibrium; a state in which the two ends or sides of a thing are balanced. Hold the scales in equipoise; the mind may be in a state of equipoise, when motives are of equal weight.

E-QUI-POL'LENCE, } n. [L. æquus and pollentia,
E-QUI-POL'LEN-CY, } power, pollco, to be able.]

1. Equality of power or force.

2. In logic, an equivalence between two or more propositions; that is, when two propositions signify the same thing, though differently expressed. Encyc.

E-QUI-POL'LENT, a. [Supra.] Having equal power or force; equivalent. In logic, having equivalent significantion. Bacon.

E-QUI-POL'LENT-LY, adv. With equal power. Barrow.

E-QUI-PON'DER-ANCE, n. [L. æquus, equal, and pondus, weight.]

Equality of weight; equipoise.

E-QUI-PON'DER-ANT, a. [Supra.] Being of the same weight. Locke.

E-QUI-PON'DER-ATE, v. a. [L. æquus, equal, and pondero, to weigh.]

To be equal in weight; to weigh as much as another thing. Wilkins.

E-QUI-PON'DI-OUS, a. Having equal weight on both sides. Glanville.

E-QUIP'PED, (e-kwipt',) pp. Furnished with habiliments, arms, and whatever is necessary for a military expedition, or for a voyage or cruise.

E-QUIP'PING, ppr. Furnishing with habiliments or warlike apparatus; supplying with things necessary for a voyage.

E-QUI-RŌ'TAL, a. Having wheels of the same size or diameter. Encyc. Dom. Econ.

EQ-UI-SĒ'TUM, n.; pl. EQUISETA. [L. equus, a horse, and seta, a bristle.]

In botany, a genus of plants, the species of which are called horse-tail. The plants are leafless, with hollow stems, containing much silicious matter. The equisetum hyemale, known as the Dutch rush, or scouring rush, is much used for scouring and polishing wood and metals. Partington. Encyc. Am.

E-QUIS'O-NANCE, n. An equal sounding; a name by which the Greeks distinguished the consonances of the octave and double octave. Busby.

EQ'UI-TA-BLE, (ek'we-ta-bl,) a. [Fr. equitable, from L. æquitas, from æquus, equal.]

1. Equal in regard to the rights of persons; distributing equal justice; giving each his due; assigning to one or more what law or justice demands; just; impartial. The judge does justice by an equitable decision; the court will make an equitable distribution of the estate.

2. Having the disposition to do justice, or doing justice; impartial; as, an equitable judge.

3. Held or exercised in equity, or with chancery powers; as, the equitable jurisdiction of a court. Kent.

EQ'UI-TA-BLE-NESS, n. The quality of being just and impartial; as, the equitableness of a judge.

2. Equity; the state of doing justice, or distributing to each according to his legal or just claims; as, the equitableness of a decision, or distribution of property.

EQ'UI-TA-BLY, (ek'we-ta-bly,) adv. In an equitable manner; justly; impartially The laws should be equitably administered.

E-QUI-TAN-GEN'TIAL, a. In geometry, a term applied to a curve whose tangent is equal to a constant line. Hutton.

EQ'UI-TANT, a. [L. equitans, equito, to ride, from equus, a horseman, or equus, a horse.]

In botany, a term denoting such a situation of unexpanded leaves in a leaf-bud, that they overlap each other entirely, and in a parallel manner, without any involution.

EQ-UI-TĀ'TION, n. A riding on horseback. Barrow.

EQ'UI-TY, (ek'we-te,) n. [L. æquitas, from æquus, equal, even, level; Fr. equité; It. equità.]

1. Justice; right. In practice, equity is the impartial distribution of justice, or the doing that to another which the laws of God and man, and of reason, give him a right to claim. It is the treating of a person according to justice and reason.

The Lord shall judge the people with equity. — Ps. xcviii.
With righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity. — Is. xi.

2. Justice; impartiality; a just regard to right or claim; as, we must in equity allow this claim.

3. In law, an equitable claim.

I consider the wife's equity to be too well settled to be shaken. Kent.

4. In jurisprudence, the correction or qualification of law, when too severe or defective; or the extension of the words of the law to cases not expressed, yet coming within the reason of the law. Hence a court of equity or chancery, is a court which corrects the operation of the literal text of the law, and supplies its defects by reasonable construction, and by rules of proceeding and deciding which are not admissible in a court of law. Equity, then, is the law of reason, exercised by the chancellor or judge, giving remedy in cases to which the courts of law are not competent. Blackstone.

5. Equity of redemption; in law, the advantage, allowed to a mortgagor, of a reasonable time to redeem lands mortgaged, when the estate is of greater value than the sum for which it was mortgaged. Blackstone.

E-QUIV'A-LENCE, n. [L. æquus, equal, and valens, from valeo, to be worth.]

1. Equality of value; equal value or worth. Take the goods, and give an equivalence in corn.

2. Equal power or force.

E-QUIV'A-LENCE, v. t. To be equal to. Brown.

[This verb has not gained currency.]

E-QUIV'A-LENC-ED, pp. Equaled in weight, &c.

E-QUIV'A-LENC-ING, ppr. Equaling in value, weight, &c.

E-QUIV'A-LENT, a. Equal in value or worth. In barter, the goods given are supposed to be equivalent to the goods received. Equivalent in value or worth, is tautological.

2. Equal in force, power, or effect. A steam-engine may have force or power equivalent to that of thirty horses.

3. Equal in moral force, cogency, or effect on the mind. Circumstantial evidence may be almost equivalent to full proof.

4. Of the same import or meaning. Friendship and amity are equivalent terms.

For now to serve and to minister, servile and ministerial are terms equivalent. South.

Equivalent propositions, in logic, are called also equipollent.

5. Equal in excellence or moral worth. Milton.

E-QUIV'A-LENT, n. That which is equal in value, weight, dignity, or force, with something else. The debtor can not pay his creditor in money, but he will pay him an equivalent; damages in money can not be an equivalent for the loss of a limb.

2. In chemistry, equivalent is the proportion expressing the weight, or quantity by weight, of any substance which combines with another substance to form a definite compound. It is often called chemical equivalent, or combining proportion.

3. In geology, a term applied to strata of different regions, which were cotemporaneous in origin. Dana.

E-QUI-VALE-LENT-LY, adv. In an equal manner.

Ē'QUI-VALVE, a. Having the valves equal in size and form, a term applied to certain bivalve shells.

Ē'QUI-VALVE, n. A bivalve, in which the valves are of equal size and form.

E-QUIV'O-CA-CY, n. Equivocalness. [Not used.] Brown.

E-QUIV'O-CAL, a. [Low L. æquivocus; æquus, equal, and vox, a word; Fr. equivoque; It. equivocale. See VOCAL.]

1. Being of doubtful signification; that may be understood in different senses; capable of a double interpretation; ambiguous; as, equivocal words, terms, or senses. Men may be misled in their opinions by the use of equivocal terms.

2. Doubtful; ambiguous; susceptible of different constructions; not decided. The character of the man is somewhat equivocal. His conduct is equivocal.

3. Uncertain; proceeding from some unknown cause, or not from the usual cause. Equivocal generation is the production of animals without the intercourse of the sexes, and of plants without seed. This doctrine is now exploded.

E-QUIV'O-CAL, n. A word or term of doubtful meaning, or capable of different meanings. Dennis.

E-QUIV'O-CAL-LY, adv. Ambiguously; in a doubtful sense; in terms susceptible of different senses. He answered the question equivocally.

2. By uncertain birth; by equivocal generation. Bentley.

E-QUIV'O-CATE, v. i. [It. equivocare; Fr. equivoquer. See EQUIVOCAL.]

To use words of a doubtful signification; to express one's opinions in terms which admit of different senses; to use ambiguous expressions with a view to mislead. To equivocate is the dishonorable work of duplicity. The upright man will not equivocate in his intercourse with his fellow-men.

E-QUIV'O-CA-TING, ppr. or a. Using ambiguous words or phrases.

E-QUIV-O-CĀ'TION, n. Ambiguity of speech; the use of words or expressions that are susceptible of a double signification, with a view to mislead. Hypocrites are often guilty of equivocation, and by this means lose the confidence of their fellow-men. Equivocation is incompatible with the Christian character and profession.

E-QUIV'O-CA-TOR, n. One who equivocates; one who uses language which is ambiguous, and may be interpreted in different ways; one who uses mental reservation.

E-QUIV'O-CA-TO-RY, a. Savoring of equivocation.

EQ'UI-VŌKE, } n. [Fr. equivoque.]
E'QUI-VŌQUE, }

1. An ambiguous term; a word susceptible of different significations.

2. Equivocation. [ferent significations.

E-QUIV'O-ROUS, a. [L. equus, horse, and voro, to eat.]

Feeding or subsisting on horse flesh.

Equivorous Tartars. Quart. Rev.

ER, the termination of many English words, is the Teutonic form of the Latin or; the one contracted from wer, the other from vir, a man. It denotes an agent, originally of the masculine gender, but now applied to men or things indifferently; as in hater, farmer, heater, grater. At the end of names of places, er signifies a man of the place; Londoner is the same as London man.

There is a passage in Herodotus, Melpomene, 110, in which the word wer, vir, a man, is mentioned as used by the Scythians; a fact proving the affinity of the Scythian and the Teutonic nation. Τας δε Αμαζονας καλεουσι οι Σκυθαι Οιορπατα. Δυναται δε το ουνομα τουτο κατ' Ελλαδα γλωσσαν ανδροκτονοι. Οιορ γαο καλεουσι τον ανδρα, το δε πατα, κτεινειν. "The Scythians call the Amazons Oiorpata, a word which may be rendered in Greek men-killers; for oior is the name they give to man; pata signifies to kill." Pata, in the Burman language, signifies to kill; but it is probable that this is really the English beat; W. bachi, to kill.

Ē'RA, n. [L. æra: Fr. ere; Sp. era. The origin of the term is not obvious.]

1. In chronology, a fixed point of time, from which any number of years is begun to be counted; as, the Christian era. It differs from epoch in this: era is a point of time fixed by some nation or denomination of men; epoch is a point fixed by historians and chronologists. The Christian era began at the epoch of the birth of Christ. Encyc.

2. A succession of years proceeding from a fixed point, or comprehended between two fixed points. The era of the Seleucides ended with the reign of Antiochus. Rollin.

E-RĀ'DI-ĀTE, v. i. [L. e and radio, to beam.]

To shoot as rays of light; to beam.

E-RĀ-DI-Ā'TION, n. Emission of rays or beams of light; emission of light or splendor. King Charles.

E-RAD'I-CA-BLE, a. That may be eradicated.

E-RAD'I-CATE, v. t. [L. eradico, from radix, root.]

1. To pull up the roots, or by the roots. Hence, to destroy any thing that grows; to extirpate; to destroy the roots, so that the plant will not be reproduced; as, to eradicate weeds.

2. To destroy thoroughly; to extirpate; as, to eradicate errors, or false principles, or vice, or disease.

E-RAD'I-CĀ-TED, pp. Plucked up by the roots; extirpated; destroyed.

E-RAD'I-CĀ-TING, ppr. Pulling up the roots of any thing; extirpating.

E-RAD-I-CĀ'TION, n. The act of plucking up by the roots; extirpation; excision; total destruction.

2. The state of being plucked up by the roots.

E-RAD'I-CA-TIVE, a. That extirpates; that cures or destroys thoroughly.

E-RAD'I-CA-TIVE, n. A medicine that effects a radical cure. Whitlock.

E-RĀS'A-BLE, a. That may or can be erased.

E-RĀSE', v. t. [L. eradu, erasi; e and radu, to scrape, Fr. raser, Sp. raer, It. raschiare, Arm. raza. See Ar. ارض eratsa, to corrode, Ch. גרר, to scrape, Heb. חרש, a graving tool, Syr. and Ar. خرط kharata, to scrape. Class Rd, No. 35, 38, and 58.]

Digitized by Google

1. To rub or scrape out, as letters or characters written, engraved, or painted; to efface; as, to erase a word or a name.

2. To obliterate; to expunge; to blot out; as with pen and ink.

3. To efface; to destroy; as ideas in the mind or memory.

4. To destroy to the foundation. [See RAZE.]

E-RĀS'ED, (e-rāste',) pp. Rubbed or scratched out; obliterated; effaced.

2. In heraldry, a term applied to any thing forcibly torn off, leaving the edges jagged and uneven.

E-RĀSE'MENT, n. The act of erasing; a rubbing out; expunction; obliteration; destruction.

E-RĀS'ER, n. One who erases.

2. A sharp instrument used to erase writings, &c.

ES-CHEAT', n. [Fr. echeoir, echoir, choir: Norm. eschier, eschire, eschever, to fall, to happen to, to eschent. The Fr. echoir seems to be the Sp. caer, which is contracted from the L. cado, cadere.]

1. Any land or tenements which casually fall or revert to the lord within his manor, through failure of heirs. It is the determination of the tenure, or dissolution of the mutual bond between the lord and tenant, from the extinction of the blood of the tenant, by death or natural means, or by civil means, as forfeiture or corruption of blood. Blackstone.

2. In the United States, the falling or passing of lands and tenements to the State, through failure of heirs or forfeiture, or in cases where no owner is found. Stat. of Mass. and Conn.

3. The place or circuit within which the king or lord is entitled to escheats. England.

4. A writ to recover escheats from the person in possession. Blackstone. Cowel. Encyc.

5. The lands which fall to the lord or state by escheat.

6. In Scots law, the forfeiture incurred by a man's being denounced a rebel.

ES-CHĒAT', v. i. In England, to revert, as land, to the lord of a manor, by means of the extinction of the blood of the tenant.

2. In America, to fall or come, as land, to the state, through failure of heirs or owners, or by forfeiture for treason. In the feudal sense, no escheat can exist in the United States; but the word is used in statutes confiscating the estates of those who abandoned their country during the revolution, and in statutes giving to the state the lands for which no owner can be found.

ES-CHĒAT', v. t. To forfeit. [Not used.] Bp. Hall.

ES-CHĒAT'A-BLE, a. Liable to escheat.

ES-CHĒAT'AGE, n. The right of succeeding to an escheat. Sherwood.

ES'CORT, n. [Fr. escorte; It. scorta, a guard or guide, scorgere, to discern, lead, conduct. Sp. and Port. escolta, r changed into l. The Italian has scorto, seen, perceived, prudent, and as a noun, abridgment; and scortare, to abridge, shorten, conduct, escort. The sense of short, shorten, is connected with L. curtus, and the sense of prudent occurs in L. cordatus. But whether there is a connection between these words, let the reader judge.]

1. A guard; a body of armed men which attends an officer, or baggage, provisions, or munitions, conveyed by land from place to place, to protect them from an enemy, or, in general, for security.

[This word is rarely, and never properly, used for naval protection or protectors; the latter we call a convoy. I have found it applied to naval protection, but it is unusual.]

2. In a more general sense, protection or safeguard on a journey or excursion; as, to travel under the escort of a friend.

ES-CORT', v. t. To attend and guard on a journey or excursion by land; to attend and guard any thing conveyed by land. General Washington arrived at Boston, escorted by a detachment of dragoons. The guards escorted Lord Wellington to London.

ES-CORT'ED, pp. Attended and guarded on a journey or excursion by land.

ES-CORT'ING, ppr. Attending and guarding on a journey or excursion by land.

ES-COT'. See Scot.

ES-COT', v. t. To pay the reckoning for; to support. Shak.

E-VA'SION, (e-vā'zhun,) n. [L. evasio, from evado, evasi. See EVADE.]

The act of eluding or avoiding, or of escaping, particularly from the pressure of an argument, from an accusation or charge, from an interrogatory and the like; excuse; subterfuge; equivocation; artifice to elude; shift. Evasion of a direct answer weakens the testimony of a witness.

Thou by evasions thy crime uncoverest more. Milton.

E-VA'SIVE, a. Using evasion or artifice to avoid; elusive; shuffling; equivocating.

He — answered evasive of the sly request. Pope.

2. Containing evasion; artfully contrived to elude a question, charge, or argument; as, an evasive answer; an evasive argument or reasoning.

E-VA'SIVE-LY, adv. By evasion or subterfuge; elusively; in a manner to avoid a direct reply or a charge.

E-VA'SIVE-NESS, n. The quality or state of being evasive.

ĒVE, n. The consort of Adam, and mother of the human race; so called by Adam, because she was the mother of all living. In this case, the word would properly belong to the Heb. חוה. But the Hebrew name is חוה, havah or chavah, coinciding with the verb to show, to discover, and Parkhurst hence denominates Eve the manifester. In the Septuagint, Eve, in Gen. iii. 20, is rendered Ζωη, life; but, in Gen. iv. 1, it is rendered Ευαν, Euan or Evan. The reason of this variation is not obvious, as the Hebrew is the same in both passages. In Russ. Eve is Eova. In the Chickasaw language of America, a wife is called awah, says Adair.

E-VEC'TION, n. [L. eveho, to carry away.]

1. A carrying out or away; also, a lifting or extolling; exaltation. Pearson.

2. In astronomy, a change of form in the lunar orbit, by which its eccentricity is sometimes increased, and sometimes diminished. Olmsted.

ĒVE, } n. [Sax. æfen, efen; D. avond; G.
Ē'VEN, (ē'vn,) } abend; Sw. afton; Dan. aften; Icc. aftan. Qu. Ch. מנא, from מנה, fanah, to turn, to decline. The evening is the decline of the day, or fall of the sun.]

1. The decline of the sun; the latter part or close of the day, and beginning of the night. Eve is used chiefly in poetry. In prose, we generally use evening.

Winter, oft, at eve resumes the breeze. Thomson.
They, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn till even fought. Shak.

2. Eve is used, also, for the evening before a holiday; as, Christmas eve. Johnson.

3. Figuratively, the period just preceding some important event; as, the eve of an engagement.

Ē'VEN-SONG, (ē'vn-,) n. A song for the evening; a form of worship for the evening. Milton.

2. The evening, or close of the day. Dryden.

Ē'VEN-TIDE, n. [even and Sax. tid, time.] Literally, the time of evening; that is, evening.

Isaac went out to meditate in the field at the even-tide. — Gen. xxiv.

[This word is nearly obsolete; tide being a useless addition to even.]

Ē'VEN, (ē'vn,) v. t. To make even or level; to level; to lay smooth.

This will even all inequalities. Evelyn.
This temple Xerxes evened with the soil. Ralegh.

2. To place in an equal state, as to obligation, or in a state in which nothing is due on either side; to balance accounts. Shak.

Ē'VEN, v. i. To be equal to. [Not used.] Carew.

Ē'VEN, (ē'vn,) adv. Noting a level or equality, or, emphatically, a like manner or degree. As it has been done to you, even so shall it be done to others. Thou art a soldier even to Cato's wishes; that is, your qualities, as a soldier, are equal to his wishes.

2. Noting equality or sameness of time; hence, emphatically, the very time. I knew the facts even when I wrote to you.

3. Noting, emphatically, identity of person.

And behold I, even I, do bring a flood of waters on the earth. — Gen. vi.

4. Likewise; in like manner.

Here all their rage and even their murmurs cease. Pope.

5. So much as. We are not even sensible of the change.

6. Noting the application of something to that which is less probably included in the phrase; or bringing something within a description which is unexpected. The common people are addicted to this vice, and even the great are not free from it. He made several discoveries which are new even to the learned.

Here also we see the sense of equality, or bringing to a level. So in these phrases, I shall even let it pass, I shall even do more, we observe the sense of bringing the mind or will to a level with what is to be

E-VĒNE', v. i. [L. evenio.] [done.
To happen. [Not in use.] Heywt.

Ē'VEN-ED, (ē'vnd,) pp. Made even or level.

Ē'VEN-ER, (ē'vn-er,) n. One that makes even.

Ē'VEN-HAND, n. Equality. Bacon.

Ē'VEN-HAND-ED, a. Impartial; equitable; just. Shak.

Ē'VEN-KEEL. A ship is properly said to be on even-keel when she draws the same water abaft and forward. The term is sometimes used, though inaccurately, to denote that she is not inclined to either side, but is upright. Brande.

Ē'VEN-ING, (ē'vn-ing,) n. [See EVE, EVEN.] The latter part and close of the day, and the beginning of darkness or night; properly, the decline or fall of the day, or of the sun.

The evening and the morning were the first day. — Gen. i.

The precise time when evening begins, or when it ends, is not ascertained by usage. The word often includes a part at least of the afternoon, and indeed the whole afternoon; as in the phrase, "The morning and evening service of the Sabbath." In strictness, evening commences at the setting of the sun, and continues during twilight; and night commences with total darkness. But, in customary language, the evening extends to bedtime, whatever that time may be. Hence we say, to spend an evening with a friend; an evening visit.

2. The decline or latter part of life. We say, the evening of life, or of one's days.

3. The decline of any thing; as, the evening of glory.

Ē'VEN-ING, (ē'vn-ing,) a. Being at the close of day; as, the evening sacrifice.

Ē'VEN-ING-HYMN, } (ē'vn-ing-) n. A hymn or song
Ē'VEN-ING-SONG, } to be sung at evening.

Ē'VEN-ING-STAR, (ē'vn-ing-) n. Hesperus or Vesper; Venus, when visible in the evening.

Ē'VEN-MIND'ED, a. Having equanimity.

Ē'VEN-LY, (ē'vn-le,) adv. With an even, level, or smooth surface; without roughness, elevations, and depressions; as, things evenly spread.

2. Equally; uniformly; in an equipoise; as, evenly balanced.

3. In a level position; horizontally.

The surface of the sea is evenly distant from the centre of the earth. Brerewood.

4. Impartially; without bias from favor or enmity. Bacon.

Ē'VEN-NESS, (ē'vn-ness,) n. The state of being even, level, or smooth; equality of surface.

2. Uniformity; regularity; as, evenness of motion.

3. Freedom from inclination to either side; equal distance from either extreme. Hale.

1. At any time; at any period or point of time, past or future. Have you ever seen the city of Paris, or shall you ever see it?

No man ever yet hated his own flesh. — Eph. v.

2. At all times; always; continually.

He shall ever love, and always be
The subject of my scorn and cruelty. Dryden.
He will ever be mindful of his covenant. — Ps. cxi.
Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. — 2 Tim. iii.

3. Forever; eternally; to perpetuity; during everlasting continuance.

This is my name forever. — Ex. iii.

In a more lax sense, this word signifies continually, for an indefinite period.

His master shall bore his ear through with an awl, and he shall serve him forever. — Ex. xxi.

These words are sometimes repeated, for the sake of emphasis; forever and ever, or forever and forever. Pope. Shak.

4. Ever and anon; at one time and another; now and then. Dryden.

5. In any degree. No man is ever the richer or happier for injustice.

Let no man fear that creature ever the less, because he sees the apostle safe from his poison. Hall.

In modern usage, this word is used for never, but very improperly.

And all the question, wrangle e'er so long,
Is only this, if God has placed him wrong. Pope.

This ought to be, ne'er so long, as the phrase is always used in the Anglo-Saxon, and in our version of the Scriptures, that is, so long as never, so long as never before, to any length of time indefinitely. Ask me never so much dowry. Charmers, charming never so wisely. These are the genuine English phrases. Let them charm so wisely as never before.

6. A word of enforcement or emphasis; thus, as soon as ever he had done it; as like him as ever he can look.

They brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came to the bottom of the den. — Dan. vi.

[Or is a misprint. It should be ere, that is, before. See ERE.]

7. In poetry, and sometimes in prose, ever is contracted into e'er.

Ever, in composition, signifies always or continually, without intermission, or to eternity.

EV-ER-AC'TIVE, a. Active at all times.

EV-ER-BUB'BLING, a. [ever and bubbling.] Continually boiling or bubbling. Crashaw.

2. Proof; conclusive evidence. L'Estrange.

EV'I-DENCE, n. [Fr., from L. evidentia, from video, to see. Class Bd.]

1. That which elucidates and enables the mind to see truth; proof arising from our own perceptions by the senses, or from the testimony of others, or from inductions of reason. Our senses furnish evidence of the existence of matter, of solidity, of color, of heat and cold, of a difference in the qualities of bodies, of figure, &c. The declarations of a witness furnish evidence of facts to a court and jury; and reasoning, or the deductions of the mind from facts or arguments, furnish evidence of truth or falsehood.

2. Any instrument or writing which contains proof.

I delivered the evidence of the purchase to Baruch. — Jer. xxxii.
I subscribed the evidence and sealed it. — Jer. xxxii.

3. A witness; one who testifies to a fact. This sense is improper and inelegant, though common, and found even in Johnson's writings.

EV'I-DENCE, v. t. To elucidate; to prove; to make clear to the mind; to show in such a manner that the mind can apprehend the truth, or in a manner to convince it. The testimony of two witnesses is usually sufficient to evidence the guilt of an offender. The works of creation clearly evidence the existence of an infinite first cause. Milton.

EV'I-DENC-ED, (ev'e-denst,) pp. Made clear to the mind; proved.

EV'I-DENC-ING, ppr. Proving clearly; manifesting.

EV'I-DENT, a. Plain; open to be seen; clear to the mental eye; apparent; manifest. The figures and colors of bodies are evident to the senses; their qualities may be made evident. The guilt of an offender can not always be made evident.

EV-I-DEN'TIAL, a. Affording evidence; clearly proving. Scott.

EV'I-DENT-LY, adv. Clearly; obviously; plainly; in a manner to be seen and understood; in a manner to convince the mind; certainly; manifestly. The evil of sin may be evidently proved by its mischievous effects.

E-VIG-I-LĀ'TION, n. [L. evigilatio.]

A waking or watching. [Little used.]

ĒV'IL, (ē'vl,) a. [Sax. efel, yfel, or hyfel; D. euvel; G. übel: Arm. fall, goall. Qu. W. gwael, vile; Ir. feal. The Irish word is connected with feallaim, to fail, which may be allied to fall. Perhaps this is from a different root Qu. Heb. Ch. and Syr. עול, to be unjust or injurious, to defraud, Ar. عال to decline, and غال to fall on or invade suddenly.

1. Having bad qualities of a natural kind; mischievous; having qualities which tend to injury, or to produce mischief.

Some evil beast hath devoured him. — Gen. xxxvii.

2. Having bad qualities of a moral kind; wicked; corrupt; perverse; wrong; as, evil thoughts; evil deeds; evil speaking; an evil generation. Scripture.

3. Unfortunate; unhappy; producing sorrow, distress, injury, or calamity; as, evil tidings; evil arrows; evil days. Scripture.

ĒV'IL, (ē'vl,) n. Evil is natural or moral. Natural evil is any thing which produces pain, distress, loss, or calamity, or which in any way disturbs the peace, impairs the happiness, or destroys the perfection of natural beings.

Moral evil is any deviation of a moral agent from the rules of conduct prescribed to him by God, or by legitimate human authority; or it is any violation of the plain principles of justice and rectitude.

There are also evils called civil, which affect injuriously the peace or prosperity of a city or state; and political evils, which injure a nation in its public capacity.

All wickedness, all crimes, all violations of law and right, are moral evils. Diseases are natural evils, but they often proceed from moral evils.

2. Misfortune; mischief; injury.

There shall no evil befall thee. — Ps. xci.
A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself. — Prov. xxii.

3. Depravity; corruption of heart, or disposition to commit wickedness; malignity.

The heart of the sons of men is full of evil. — Eccles. ix.

4. Malady; as, the king's evil or scrofula.

They speak evil against you as evil-doers. — 1 Pet. ii.

ĒV'IL-EYE, (ē'vl-ī,) n. A supposed power of fascinating, of bewitching, or otherwise injuring, by the eyes or looks. The belief in the evil eye has been a prevalent superstition in most ages and countries. Encyc. Am.

ĒV'IL-ĒY-ED, (ē'vl-īde,) a. [evil and eye.] Looking with an evil eye, or with envy, jealousy, or bad design.

ĒV'IL-FĀ'VOR-ED, a. [evil and favor.] Having a bad countenance or external appearance; ill-favored. Bacon.

ĒV'IL-FĀ'VOR-ED-NESS, n. Deformity. Deut.

ĒV'IL-LY, adv. Not well. [Little used.] Bp. Taylor.

ĒV'IL-MIND'ED, a. [evil and mind.] Having evil dispositions or intentions; disposed to mischief or sin; malicious; malignant; wicked. Slanderous reports are propagated by evil-minded persons. [This word is in common use.]

ĒV'IL-NESS, n. Badness; viciousness; malignity; as, evilness of heart; the evilness of sin.

ĒV'IL-Ō'MEN-ED, a. Attended with unfavorable omens.

ĒV'IL-ONE, (ē'vl-wun,) n. The great enemy of souls; Satan.

ĒV'IL-SPĒAK'ING, (ē'vl-speek'ing,) n. [evil and speak.] Slander; defamation; calumny; censoriousness. 1 Pet. ii.

ĒV'IL-WISH'ING, a. [evil and wish.] Wishing harm to; as, an evil-wishing mind. Sidney.

ĒV'IL-WŌRK'ER, (ē'vl-wurk'er,) n. [evil and work.] One who does wickedness. Phil. iii.

EX-CEL', (ek-sel',) v. t. [L. excello, the root of which, cello, is not in use. In Ar. قَالَ kaila, signifies to lift, raise, excel; also, to speak, to strike, to beat. So we use beat in the sense of surpass. See Class Gl, No. 31 and 49.]
1. To go beyond; to exceed; to surpass in good qualities or laudable deeds; to outdo.

Excelling others, these were great;
Thou greater still, must these excel. Prior.
Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all. — Prov. xxxi.

2. To exceed or go beyond in bad qualities or deeds; as, to excel envy itself in mischief. Spenser.
3. To exceed; to surpass.

EX-CEL', v. i. To have good qualities, or to perform meritorious actions, in an unusual degree; to be eminent, illustrious, or distinguished.

Bless the Lord, ye his angels, that excel in strength. — Ps. ciii.

We say, to excel in mathematics; to excel in painting; to excel in heroic achievements.

EX-CEL'LED, (ek-seld',) pp. Surpassed; outdone; exceeded in good qualities or laudable achievements.

EX'CEL-LENCE, } n. [Fr., from L. excellentia.]
EX'CEL-LEN-CY, }
1. The state of possessing good qualities in an unusual or eminent degree; the state of excelling in any thing.
2. Any valuable quality; any thing highly laudable, meritorious, or virtuous, in persons, or valuable and esteemed, in things. Purity of heart, uprightness of mind, sincerity, virtue, piety, are excellencies of character; symmetry of parts, strength, and beauty are excellencies of body; an accurate knowledge of an art is an excellence in the artisan; soundness and durability are excellencies in timber; fertility, in land; elegance, in writing. In short, whatever contributes to exalt man, or to render him esteemed and happy, or to bless society, is in him an excellence.
3. Dignity; high rank in the scale of beings. Angels are beings of more excellence than men; men are beings of more excellence than brutes.
4. A title of honor formerly given to kings and emperors, now given to embassadors, governors, and other persons, below the rank of kings, but elevated above the common classes of men.

EX'CEL-LENT, (ek'sel-lent,) a. Being of great virtue or worth; eminent or distinguished for what is amiable, valuable, or laudable; as, an excellent man or citizen; an excellent judge or magistrate
2. Being of great value or use, applied to things; remarkable for good properties: as, excellent timber; an excellent farm; an excellent horse; excellent fruit.
3. Distinguished for superior attainments; as, an excellent artist.
4. Consummate; complete; in an ill sense.

Elizabeth was an excellent hypocrite. Hume.

EX-CEN'TRIC. See ECCENTRIC.

EX-CEPT', (ek-sept',) v. t. [Fr. excepter; It. eccettare; from L. excipio; ex and capio, to take. See CAPTION, CAPTURE.]
1. To take or leave out of any number specified; to exclude; as, of the thirty persons present and concerned in a riot, we must except two.
2. To take or leave out any particular or particulars from a general description.

When he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted who did put all things under him. — 1 Cor. xv.

EX-CEPT', v. i. To object; to make an objection or objections; usually followed by to; sometimes by against. I except to a witness, or to his testimony, on account of his interest or partiality.

EX-CEPT', pp. [Contracted from excepted.] Taken out; not included. All were involved in this affair, except one; that is, one excepted. the case absolute or independent clause. Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish; that is, except this fact, that ye repent, or this fact being excepted, removed, taken away, ye shall all likewise perish. Or except may be considered as the imperative mode. Except thou, or ye, this fact, ye shall all likewise perish. Hence, except is equivalent to without, unless, and denotes exclusion.

EX-CEPT'ED, pp. See EXCEPT.

EX-CEPT'ING, ppr. Taking or leaving out; excluding.
2. This word is also used in the sense of except, as above explained. The prisoners were all condemned, excepting three. This is an anomalous use of the word, unless, in some cases, it may be referred to a pronoun. Excepted would be better; three excepted; three being excepted.

EX-CEP'TION, (ek-sep'shun,) n. The act of excepting, or excluding from a number designated, or from a description; exclusion. All the representatives voted for the bill, with the exception of five; all the land is in tillage, with an exception of two acres.
2. Exclusion from what is comprehended in a general rule or proposition.
3. That which is excepted, excluded, or separated, from others in a general description; the person or thing specified as distinct or not included. Almost every general rule has its exceptions.
4. An objection; that which is or may be offered in opposition to a rule, proposition, statement, or allegation; with to; sometimes with against. He made some exceptions to the argument.
5. Objection, with dislike; offense; slight anger or resentment; with at, to, or against, and commonly used with take; as, to take exception at a severe remark; to take exception to what was said.

But it is more generally followed by at.
6. In law, the denial of what is alleged and considered as valid by the other party, either in point of law or in pleading; or an allegation against the sufficiency of an answer. In law, it is a stop or stay to an action, and it is either dilatory or peremptory. Blackstone.

EX-CHANGE', (eks-chānj',) v. t. [Fr. echanger; Arm. eccinch; from changer, ceinch, to change.]

1. In commerce, to give one thing or commodity for another; to alienate or transfer the property of a thing, and receive, in compensation for it, something of supposed equal value; to barter; and, in vulgar language, to swap; to truck. It differs from sell only in the kind of compensation. To sell is to alienate for money: to exchange is to alienate one commodity for another; as, to exchange horses; to exchange oxen for corn.

2. To lay aside, quit, or resign, one thing, state, or condition, and take another in the place of it; as, to exchange a crown for a cowl; to exchange a throne for a cell or a hermitage; to exchange a life of ease for a life of toil

3. To give and receive reciprocally; to give and receive in compensation the same thing.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet. Shak.

4. To give and receive the like thing; as, to exchange thoughts; to exchange work; to exchange blows; to exchange prisoners.

It has with before the person receiving the thing given, and for before the equivalent. Will you exchange horses with me? Will you exchange your horse for mine?

EX-CHANGE', n. In commerce, the act of giving one thing or commodity for another; barter; traffic by permutation, in which the thing received is supposed to be equivalent to the thing given.

Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses. — Gen. xlvii.

2. The act of giving up or resigning one thing or state for another, without contract.

3. The act of giving and receiving reciprocally; as, an exchange of thoughts; an exchange of civilities.

4. The contract by which one commodity is transferred to another for an equivalent commodity.

5. The thing given in return for something received; or the thing received in return for what is given.

There's my exchange. Shak.

In ordinary business, this is called CHANGE.

6. The form of exchanging one debt or credit for another; or the receiving or paying of money in one place, for an equal sum in another, by order, draft, or bill of exchange. A in London is creditor to B in New York, and C in London owes D in New York a like sum. A in London draws a bill of exchange on B in New York; C in London purchases the bill, by which A receives his debt due from B in New York. C transmits the bill to D in New York, who receives the amount from B.

Bills of exchange, drawn on persons in a foreign country, are called foreign bills of exchange; the like bills, drawn on persons in different parts or cities of the same country, are called inland bills of exchange.

A bill of exchange is a mercantile contract, in which four persons are primarily concerned.

7. In mercantile language, a bill drawn for money is called exchange, instead of a bill of exchange.

8. The course of exchange, is the current price between two places, which is above or below par, or at par. Exchange is at par, when a bill in New York, for the payment of one hundred pounds sterling in London, can be purchased for one hundred pounds. If it can be purchased for less, exchange is under par. If the purchaser is obliged to give more, exchange is above par.

9. In law, a mutual grant of equal interests, the one in consideration of the other. Estates exchanged must be equal in quantity, as fee-simple for fee-simple. Blackstone.

10. The place where the merchants, brokers, and bankers of a city meet to transact business, at certain hours; often contracted into CHANGE.

EX-CHANGE-A-BIL'I-TY, n. The quality or state of being exchangeable.

Though the law ought not to be contravened by an express article admitting the exchangeability of such persons. Washington.

EX-CHANGE'A-BLE, a. That may be exchanged; capable of being exchanged; fit or proper to be exchanged.

EX-CHANG'ED, (eks-chānjd',) pp. Given or received for something else; bartered.

EX-CHANG'ER, n. One who exchanges; one who practices exchange. Matt. xxv.

EX-CHANG'ING, ppr. Giving and receiving one commodity for another; giving and receiving mutually; laying aside or relinquishing one thing or state for another.

EX-CHEQ'UER, (eks-chek'er,) n. [Fr. echiquier, checker-work, a chess-board. See CHESS and CHECKER.]

In England, an ancient court of record, intended principally to collect and superintend the king's debts and duties or revenues, and so called from scaccharium, or from the same root, denoting a checkered cloth, which covers the table. It consists of two divisions; the receipt of the exchequer, (now transferred to the Bank of England,) which manages the royal revenue; and the judicial part, which is divided into a court of law and a court of equity. The court of equity is held in the exchequer chamber, before the lord treasurer, the chancellor of the exchequer, the chief baron, and three inferior barons. The common law court is held before the barons, without the treasurer or chancellor. Blackstone.

Exchequer bills; in England, bills for money, or promissory bills, issued from the exchequer; a species of paper currency emitted under the authority of the government, and bearing interest.

exoteric doctrines of the ancient philosophers were those which were openly professed and taught. The esoteric were secret, or taught only to a few chosen disciples. Enfield. Encyc.

EX'O-TER-Y, n. What is obvious or common. Search.

EX-OT'IC, (egz-ot'ik,) a. [Gr. εξωτικος, from εξω, without.]

Foreign; introduced from a foreign country; not native; extraneous; as, an exotic plant; an exotic term or word.

EX-OT'IC, n. A plant, shrub, or tree, not native; a plant introduced from a foreign country. Addison.

2. A word of foreign origin introduced into a language.

EX-OT'I-CISM, n. The state of being exotic.

EX-PAND', v. t. [L. expando; ex and pando, to open, or spread; It. spandere, to pour out; coinciding with Eng. span, D. span, spannen, Sw. spänna, Dan. spænder. See Ar. بان baina, Class Bn, No. 3. The primary sense is, to strain or stretch; and this seems to be the sense of bend, L. pandus.]

1. To open; to spread; as, a flower expands its leaves.

2. To spread; to enlarge a surface; to diffuse; as, a stream expands its waters over a plain.

3. To dilate; to enlarge in bulk; to distend; as, to expand the chest by inspiration; heat expands all bodies; air is expanded by rarefaction.

4. To enlarge; to extend; as, to expand the sphere of benevolence; to expand the heart or affections.

EX-PAND', v. i. To open; to spread. Flowers expand in spring.

2. To dilate; to extend in bulk or surface. Metals expand by heat; a lake expands, when swelled by rains.

3. To enlarge; as, the heart expands with joy.

EX-PAND'ED, pp. or a. Opened; spread; extended; dilated; enlarged; diffused.

EX-PAND'ING, ppr. or a. Opening; spreading; extending; dilating; diffusing.

EX-PANSE', (eks-pans',) n. [L. expansum.]

A spreading; extent; a wide extent of space or body; as, the expanse of heaven.

> The smooth expanse of crystal lakes. Pope.

EX-PANS-I-BIL/I-TY, n. [from expansible.] The capacity of being expanded; capacity of extension in surface or bulk; as, the expansibility of air.

EX-PANS'I-BLE, a. [Fr., from expand.] Capable of being expanded or spread; capable of being extended, dilated, or diffused.

> Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight. Grew.

EX-PANS'I-BLE-NESS, n. Expansibility.

EX-PANS'I-BLY, adv. In an expansible manner.

EX-PANS'ILE. a. Capable of expanding, or of being dilated.

EX-PAN'SION, (eks-pan'shun,) n. [L. expansio.]

1. The act of expanding or spreading out.

2. The state of being expanded; the enlargement of surface or bulk; dilatation. We apply expansion to surface, as the expansion of a sheet or of a lake, and to bulk, as the expansion of fluids or metals by heat; but not to a line or length without breadth.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is enlarged; also, pure space or distance between remote bodies.

4. Enlargement; as, the expansion of the heart or affections.

5. In commerce, an increase of issues of bank notes.

EX-PAN'SION-CURB, n. A contrivance to counteract expansion and contraction by heat, as in chronometers.

EX-PANS'IVE, a. [Fr.] Having the power to expand, to spread, or to dilate; as, the expansive force of heat or fire. Gregory.

2. Having the capacity of being expanded; as, the expansive quality of air; the expansive atmosphere. Thomson.

3. Widely extended; as, expansive benevolence.

EX-PANS'IVE-NESS, n. The quality of being expansive.

EX PAR'TE, [L.] On one part; as, ex parte evidence, that which is brought forward by one side only; an ex parte council, one which assembles at the request of only one of the parties in dispute.

EX-PA'TIATE, (eks-pā'shāte,) v. i. [L. expatior; ex and spatior, to wander, to enlarge in discourse, spatium, space, probably allied to pateo, to open. Class Bd.]

1. To move at large; to rove without prescribed limits; to wander in space without restraint.

> He bids his soul expatiate in the skies. Pope.
> Expatiate free o'er all this scene of man. Pope.

2. To enlarge in discourse or writing; to be copious in argument or discussion. On important topics, the orator thinks himself at liberty to expatiate.

EX-PA'TIA-TING, ppr Roving at large; moving in space without certain limits or restraint; enlarging in discourse or writing.

EX-PA-TI-Ā'TION, n. Act of expatiating.

EX-PA'TIA-TOR, n. One who enlarges or amplifies in language.

EX-PA'TIA-TO-RY, a. Expatiating.

EX-PA'TRI-ATE or EX-PAT'RI-ATE, v. t. [Fr. expatrier; It. spatriare; from L. ex and patria, country.]

In a general sense, to banish.

To expatriate one's self, is to quit one's country, renouncing citizenship and allegiance in that country, to take residence and become a citizen in another country. The right to expatriate one's self, is denied in feudal countries, and much controverted in the United States.

EX-PA'TRI-Ā-TED or EX-PAT'RI-Ā-TED, pp. Banished; removed from one's native country, with renunciation of citizenship and allegiance.

EX-PA'TRI-Ā-TING or EX-PAT'RI-Ā-TING, ppr. Banishing; abandoning one's country, with renunciation of allegiance.

EX-PA-TRI-Ā'TION or EX-PAT-RI-Ā'TION, n. Banishment. More generally, the forsaking one's own country, with a renunciation of allegiance, and with the view of becoming a permanent resident and citizen in another country.

EX-PECT', v. t. [L. expecto; ex and specto, to look, that is, to reach forward, or to fix the eyes.]

1. To wait for.

> The guards,
> By me encamped on yonder hill, expect
> Their motion. Milton.

[This sense, though often used by Gibbon, seems to be obsolescent.]

2. To look for; to have a previous apprehension of something future, whether good or evil; to entertain at least a slight belief that an event will happen. We expect a visit that has been promised; we expect money will be paid at the time it is due, though we are often disappointed.

Expect, in its legitimate sense, always refers to a future event. [The common phrase, I expect it was, is as vulgar as it is improper.]

3. To require or demand; as, payment will be expected when the note falls due. Whateley.

EX-PECT', v. i. To wait; to stay. Sandys.

EX-PECT'A-BLE, a. To be expected; that may be expected.

EX-PECT'ANCE, } n. The act or state of expecting;
EX-PECT'AN-CY, } expectation. Milton. Shak.

2. Something expected. Shak.

3. Hope; a looking for with pleasure. Shak.

EX-PECT'AN-CY, n. In law, a state of waiting or suspension. An estate in expectancy, is one which is to take effect or commence after the determination of another estate. Estates of this kind are remainders and reversions. A remainder, or estate in remainder, is one which is limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined. Thus, when a grant of land is made to A for twenty years, and, after the determination of that term, to B and his heirs forever, A is tenant for years, remainder to B in fee. In this case, the estate of B is in expectancy, that is, waiting for the determination of the estate for years. A reversion is the residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of a particular estate granted out by him. As, when A leases an estate to B for twenty years, after the determination of that period, the estate reverts to the lessor; but, during the term, the estate of the lessor is in expectancy. Blackstone.

EX-PECT'ANT, a. Waiting; looking for. Swift.

2. Expectant estate, one which is suspended till the determination of a particular estate. Blackstone.

EX-PECT'ANT, n. One who expects; one who waits in expectation; one held in dependence by his belief or hope of receiving some good. Those who have the gift of offices are usually surrounded by expectants.

EX-PEC-TĀ'TION, n. [L. expectatio.]

1. The act of expecting or looking forward to a future event with at least some reason to believe the event will happen. Expectation differs from hope. Hope originates in desire, and may exist with little or no ground of belief that the desired event will arrive. Expectation is founded on some reasons which render the event probable. Hope is directed to some good; expectation is directed to good or evil.

> The same weakness of mind which indulges absurd expectations, produces petulance in disappointment. Irving.

2. The state of expecting, either with hope or fear.

3. Prospect of good to come.

> My soul, wait thou only on God, for my expectation is from him.—Ps. lxii.

4. The object of expectation; the expected Messiah. Milton.

5. A state or qualities in a person which excite expectations in others of some future excellence; as, a youth of expectation. Sidney. Otway.

We now more generally say, a youth of promise.

6. In chances, the value of any prospect of prize or property depending upon the happening of some uncertain event. A sum of money, to be paid when an event happens, has a determinate value before that event happens. If the chances of receiving or not receiving a hundred dollars, when an event arrives, are equal, then, before the arrival of the event, the expectation is worth half the money. Barlow. Encyc.

Expectation of life; in annuities, a term applied to the mean or average duration of the life of individuals, after any specified age. P. Cyc.

EX-PEC'T'A-TIVE, n. That which is expected. [Not used.]

EX-PEC'T'ER, n. One who expects; one who waits for something, or for another person. Swift. Shak.

EX-PEC'T'ING, ppr. Waiting or looking for the arrival of.

EX-PEC'T'ING-LY, adv. In a state of expectation.

EX-PEC'TO-RANT, a. [See EXPECTORATE.] Having the quality of promoting discharges from the lungs.

EX-PEC'TO-RANT, n. A medicine which promotes discharges from the lungs.

EX-PEC'TO-RĀTE, v. t. [L. expectoro; Sp. expectorar; Fr. expectorer; from L. ex and pectus, the breast.]

To eject from the trachea or lungs; to discharge phlegm or other matter, by coughing, hawking, and spitting. Coxe.

EX-PEC'TO-RĀ-TED, pp. or a. Discharged from the lungs.

EX-PEC'TO-RĀ-TING, ppr. Throwing from the lungs by hawking and spitting.

EX-PEC-TO-RĀ'TION, n. The act of discharging phlegm or mucus from the lungs, by coughing, hawking, and spitting; also, the matter thus discharged. Encyc.

EX-PEC'TO-RA-TIVE, a. Having the quality of promoting expectoration.

EX PE'DE HER'CU-LEM, [L.] From the remaining foot of Hercules' statue, learn the size of his entire person; from a partial exhibition, learn the full extent of a man's powers or characteristic excellences.

EX-PĒ'DI-ĀTE, v. t. To expedite. [Not in use.]

EX-PĒ'DI-ENCE, } n. [See SPEED, EXPEDIENT, and EX-PĒ'DI-EN-CY, } EXPEDITE.]

1. Fitness or suitableness to effect some good end or the purpose intended; propriety under the particular circumstances of the case. The practicability of a measure is often obvious, when the expedience of it is questionable.

2. Expedition; adventure. [Not now used.] Shak.

3. Expedition; haste; dispatch. [Not now used.] Shak.

EX-PĒ'DI-ENT, (eks-pē'de-ent,) a. [L. expediens; expedio, to hasten; Eng. speed; Gr. σπευδω.]

1. Literally, hastening; urging forward. Hence, tending to promote the object proposed; fit or suitable for the purpose; proper under the circumstances. Many things may be lawful, which are not expedient.

2. Useful; profitable.

3. Quick; expeditious. [Not used.] Shak.

EX-PĒ'DI-ENT, n. That which serves to promote or advance; any means which may be employed to accomplish an end. Let every expedient be employed to effect an important object, nor let exertions cease till all expedients fail of producing the effect.

2. Shift; means devised or employed in an exigency. Dryden.

EX-PĒ'DI-ENT-LY, adv. Fitly; suitably; conveniently.

2. Hastily; quickly. [Obs.] Shak.

EX-PED'I-TĀTE, v. t. [L. ex and pes, foot.]

In the forest laws of England, to cut out the balls or claws of a dog's fore feet, for the preservation of the king's game.

EX-PED-I-TĀ'TION, n. The act of cutting out the balls or claws of a dog's fore feet. Encyc.

EX'PE-DITE, v. t. [L. expedio; Sp. expedir; Fr. expedier; It. spedire; Ar. أفذ afado, to hasten, or وفذ wafada, to send, to move hastily, to be suitable; Eng. speed. Expedio is compound. We see the same root in impedio, to hinder, to send against, to move in opposition.]

1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate motion or progress. The general sent orders to expedite the march of the army. Artificial heat may expedite the growth of plants.

2. To dispatch; to send from.

> Such charters are expedited of course. Bacon.

3. To hasten by rendering easy. See No. 1.

EX'PE-DITE, a. [L. expeditus.]

1. Quick; speedy; expeditious; as, expedite execution. [Little used.] Sandys.

2. Easy; clear of impediments; unencumbered; as, to make a way plain and expedite. [Unusual.]

3. Active; nimble; ready; prompt. [Hooker.

> The more expedite will be the soul in its operations. [Unusual.] Tillotson.

4. Light-armed. [Not used.] Bacon.

EX'PE-DIT-ED, pp. Facilitated; freed from impediment.

EX'PE-DITE-LY, adv. Readily; hastily; speedily; promptly. Grew.

EX'PE-DIT-ING, ppr. Facilitating; hastening.

EX-PEL', v. t. [L. expello; ex and pello, to drive, Gr. βαλλω; It. espellare; W. yspeliaw; and from the L. participle, Fr. expulser. Class Bl.]
1. To drive or force out from any inclosed place; as, to expel wind from the stomach, or air from a bellows. [The word is applicable to any force, physical or moral.]
2. To drive out; to force to leave; as, to expel the inhabitants of a country; to expel wild beasts from a forest.
3. To eject; to throw out. Dryden.
4. To banish; to exile. Pope.
5. To reject; to refuse. [Little used.]

And would you not poor fellowship expel? Hub. Tale.

6. To exclude; to keep out or off. Shak.
7. In college government, to command to leave; to dissolve the connection of a student; to interdict him from further connection.

EX-PEL'LA-BLE, a. That may be expelled or driven out.

Acid expellable by heat. Kirwan.

EX-PEL'LED, (eks-peld',) pp. or a. Driven out or away; forced to leave; banished; exiled; excluded.

EX-PEL'LER, n. He or that which drives out or away.

EX-PEL'LING, ppr. Driving out; forcing away; compelling to quit or depart; banishing; excluding.

EX-PEND', v. t. [L. expendo; ex and pendo, to weigh; Sp. expender; Fr. depenser, from L. dispendo; It. spendere; properly, to weigh off; hence, to lay out.]
1. To lay out; to disburse; to spend; to deliver or distribute, either in payment or in donations. We expend money for food, drink, and clothing. We expend a little in charity, and a great deal in idle amusements.
2. To lay out; to use; to employ; to consume; as, to expend time and labor. I hope the time, labor, and money expended on this book will not be wholly misemployed.
3. To use and consume; as, to expend hay in feeding cattle.
4. To consume; to dissipate; to waste; as, the oil of a lamp is expended in burning; water is expended in mechanical operations.

EX-PEND', v. i. To be laid out, used, or consumed.

EX-PEND'ED, pp. Laid out; spent; disbursed; used; consumed.

EX-PEND'ING, ppr. Spending; using; employing; wasting.

EX-PEND'I-TURE, n. The act of expending; a laying out, as of money; disbursement. A corrupt administration is known by extravagant expenditures of public money.

2. Money expended; expense

The receipts and expenditures of this extensive country. Hamilton.

EX-PENSE', (ex-pens',) n. [L. expensum.]
1. A laying out or expending; the disbursing of money, or the employment and consumption, as of time or labor. Great enterprises are accomplished only by a great expense of money, time, and labor.
2. Money expended; cost; charge; that which is disbursed in payment or in charity. A prudent man limits his expenses by his income. The expenses of war are rarely or never reimbursed by the acquisition either of goods or territory.
3. That which is used, employed, laid out, or consumed; as, the expense of time or labor.

EX-PENSE'FUL, a. Costly; expensive. [Little used.] Wotton.

EX-PENSE'FUL-LY, adv. In a costly manner; with great expense. Weever.

EX-PENSE'LESS, a. Without cost or expense. Milton.

EX-PENS'IVE, a. Costly; requiring much expense; as, an expensive dress or equipage; an expensive family. Vices are usually more expensive than virtues.
2. Given to expense; free in the use of money; extravagant; lavish; applied to persons. Of men, some are frugal and industrious; others, idle and expensive. Temple.
3. Liberal; generous in the distribution of property.

This requires an active, expensive, indefatigable goodness. Spratt.

EX-PENS'IVE-LY, adv. With great expense; at great cost or charge. Swift.

EX-PENS'IVE-NESS, n. Costliness; the quality of incurring or requiring great expenditures of money. The expensiveness of war is not its greatest evil.
2. Addictedness to expense; extravagance; applied to persons.

EX-PĒ'RI-ENCE, n. [L. experientia, from experior, to try; ex and ant. perior; Gr. πειραω, to attempt, whence pirate; G. erfahren, from fahren, to move, to go, to drive, to ferry; D. ervaaren, from vaaren, to go, to move, to sail; Sw. förfara, fara; Dan. forfarer, farer; Sax. faran; Goth. faran; Eng. to fare. The L. periculum, Eng. peril, are from the same root. We see the root of these words is, to go, to fare, to drive, urge, or press, to strain or stretch forward. See Class Br, No. 3, Ar. No. 4, 19, 23.]
1. Trial, or a series of trials or experiments; active effort or attempt to do or to prove something, or repeated efforts. A man attempts to raise wheat on moist or clayey ground; his attempt fails of success; experience proves that wheat will not flourish on such a soil. He repeats the trial, and his experience proves the same fact. A single trial is usually denominated an experiment; experience may be a series of trials, or the result of such trials.
2. Observation of a fact, or of the same facts or events happening under like circumstances.
3. Trial from suffering or enjoyment; suffering itself; the use of the senses; as, the experience we have of pain or sickness. We know the effect of light, of smell, or of taste, by experience. We learn the instability of human affairs by observation or by experience. We learn the value of integrity by experience. Hence,
4. Knowledge derived from trials, use, practice, or from a series of observations.

EX-PĒ'RI-ENCE, v. t. To try by use, by suffering, or by enjoyment. Thus we all experience pain, sorrow, and pleasure; we experience good and evil; we often experience a change of sentiments and views.
2. To know by practice or trial; to gain knowledge or skill by practice, or by a series of observations.

EX-PĒ'RI-EN-CED, (eks-pē're-enst,) pp. Tried; used; practiced.
2. a. Taught by practice or by repeated observations; skillful or wise by means of trials, use, or observation; as, an experienced artist; an experienced physician.

EX-PĒ'RI-EN-CER, n. One who makes trials or experiments.

EX-PĒ'RI-EN-CING, ppr. Making trial; suffering or enjoying.

EX-PER'I-MENT, n. [L. experimentum, from experior, as in Experience, which see.]
A trial; an act or operation designed to discover some unknown truth, principle, or effect, or to establish it when discovered. It differs from observation, which is merely the attentive consideration of things, as they exist in nature. Experiments in chemistry disclose the qualities of natural bodies. A series of experiments proves the uniformity of the laws of matter. It is not always safe to trust to a single experiment. It is not expedient to try many experiments in legislation.

A political experiment can not be made in a laboratory, nor determined in a few hours. J. Adams.

EX-PER'I-MENT, v. i. To make trial; to make an experiment; to operate on a body in such a manner as to discover some unknown fact, or to establish it when known. Philosophers experiment on natural bodies for the discovery of their qualities and combinations.
2. To try; to search by trial.
3. To experience. [Not used.] Locke.

EX-PER'I-MENT, v. t. To try; to know by trial. [Little used.] Herbert.

EX-PER-I-MENT'AL, a. Pertaining to experiment.
2. Known by experiment or trial; derived from experiment.
Experimental knowledge is the most valuable, because it is most certain, and most safely to be trusted.
3. Built on experiments; founded on trial and observations, or on a series of results, the effects of operations; as, experimental philosophy.
4. Taught by experience; having personal experience.

Admit to the holy communion such only as profess and appear to be regenerated, and experimental Christians. H. Humphreys.

5. Known by experience; derived from experience; as, experimental religion.

EX-PER-I-MENT'AL-IST, n. One who makes experiments. Burgess.

EX-PER-I-MENT'AL-LY, adv. By experiment; by trial; by operation and observation of results.
2. By experience; by suffering or enjoyment. We are all experimentally acquainted with pain and pleasure.

EX-PER-I-MENT'A-TIVE, a. Experimental.

EX-PER'I-MENT-ED, pp. Tried; searched out by trial.

EX-PER'I-MENT-ER, n. One who makes experiments; one skilled in experiments.

EX-PER'I-MENT-ING, ppr. Making experiments or trials.

EX-PER'I-MENT-IST, n. One who makes experiments. [This is more analogical than EXPERIMENTALIST.] Good.

EX-PER-I-MEN''TUM CRŪ'CIS. [L.] Experiment of the cross; a test of the severest and most searching nature; a decisive experiment.

EX-PERT', a. [L. expertus, from experior, to try. See EXPERIENCE.]
1. Properly, experienced; taught by use, practice, or experience; hence, skillful; well instructed; having familiar knowledge of; as, an expert philosopher.
2. Dextrous; adroit; ready; prompt; having a facility of operation or performance from practice; as, an expert operator in surgery. It is usually followed by in; as, expert in surgery; expert in performance on a musical instrument. Pope uses expert of arms, but improperly.

EX-PERT', v. t. To experience. Spenser.

EX-PERT', n. An expert person. Ed. Rev.

EX-PERT'LY, adv. In a skillful or dextrous manner; adroitly; with readiness and accuracy.

EX-PERT'NESS, n. Skill derived from practice; readiness; dexterity; adroitness; as, expertness in musical performance; expertness in war or in seamanship; expertness in reasoning.

EX-PET'I-BLE, a. [L. expetibilis.]
That may be wished for; desirable. [Not used.]

EX'PI-A-BLE, a. [L. expiabilis. See EXPIATE.]
That may be expiated; that may be atoned for and done away; as, an expiable offense; expiable guilt.

EX'PI-ĀTE, v. t. [L. expio; ex and pio, to worship, to atone; pius, pious, mild. The primary sense is probably to appease, to pacify, to allay resentment, which is the usual sense of atone in most languages which I have examined. Pio is probably contracted from pico, and from the root of paco, the radical sense of which is to lay, set, or fix; the primary sense of peace, pax. Hence the sense of mild in pius. But this opinion is offered only as probable.]
1. To atone for; to make satisfaction for; to extinguish the guilt of a crime by subsequent acts of piety or worship, by which the obligation to punish the crime is canceled. To expiate guilt or a crime, is to perform some act which is supposed to purify the person guilty; or some act which is accepted by the offended party as satisfaction for the injury; that is, some act by which his wrath is appeased, and his forgiveness procured.
2. To make reparation for; as, to expiate an injury. Clarendon.
3. To avert the threats of prodigies. Johnson.

EX'PI-Ā-TED, pp. Atoned for; done away by satisfaction offered and accepted.

EX'PI-Ā-TING, ppr. Making atonement or satisfaction for; destroying or removing guilt, and canceling the obligation to punish.

EX-PI-Ā''TION, n. [L. expiatio.]
1. The act of atoning for a crime; the act of making satisfaction for an offense, by which the guilt is done away, and the obligation of the offended person to punish the crime is canceled; atonement; satisfaction. Among pagans and Jews, expiation was made chiefly by sacrifices, or washings, and purification. Among Christians, expiation for the sins of men is usually considered as made only by the obedience and sufferings of Christ.
2. The means by which atonement for crimes is made; atonement; as sacrifices and purification among heathens, and the obedience and death of Christ among Christians.
3. Among ancient heathens, an act by which the threats of prodigies were averted. Hayward.

EX'PI-A-TO-RY, a. Having the power to make atonement or expiation; as, an expiatory sacrifice.

EX-PI-LĀ''TION, n. [L. expilatio, from expilo, to strip; ex and pilo, to peel.]
A stripping; the act of committing waste on land, to the injury of an heir; waste. [Little used.] Fuller.

EX-PIR'A-BLE, a. [from expire.] That may expire; that may come to an end.

EX-PIR'ANT, n. One expiring.

EX-PI-RĀ''TION, n. [L. expiratio, from expiro. See EXPIRE.]
1. The act of breathing out, or forcing the air from the lungs. Respiration consists of expiration and inspiration.
2. The last emission of breath; death. Rambler.
3. The emission of volatile matter from any substance; evaporation; exhalation; as, the expiration of warm air from the earth.
4. Matter expired; exhalation; vapor; fume. Bacon.
5. Cessation; close; end; conclusion; termination of a limited time; as, the expiration of a month or year; the expiration of a term of years; the expiration of a lease; the expiration of a contract or agreement.

EX-PI'RA-TO-RY, a. Pertaining to the emission or expiration of breath from the lungs. Hall.

EX-PIRE', v. t. [L. expiro, for exspiro; ex and spiro, to breathe.]

1. To breathe out; to throw out the breath from the lungs; opposed to inspire. We expire air at every breath.

2. To exhale; to emit in minute particles, as a fluid or volatile matter. The earth expires a damp or warm vapor; the body expires fluid matter from the pores; plants expire odors.

3. To conclude. [Obs.]

EX-PIRE', v. i. To emit the last breath, as an animal; to die; to breathe the last.

2. To perish; to end; to fail or be destroyed; to come to nothing; to be frustrated. With the loss of battle all his hopes of empire expired.

3. To fly out; to be thrown out with force. [Rare.]

The ponderous ball expires. Dryden.

4. To come to an end; to cease; to terminate; to close or conclude, as a given period. A lease will expire on the first of May. The year expires on Monday. The contract will expire at Michaelmas. The days had not expired.

When forty years had expired. — Acts vii.

EX-PIR'ED, pret. and pp. of EXPIRE.

EX-PIR'ING, ppr. Breathing out air from the lungs; emitting fluid or volatile matter; exhaling; breathing the last breath; dying; ending; terminating.

2. a. Dying; pertaining to or uttered at the time of dying; as, expiring words; expiring groans. J. Lathrop.

EX-PIS-CA'TION, n. A fishing. Chapman.

EX-PLAIN', v. t. [L. explano; ex and planus, plain, open, smooth; Sp. explanar; It. spianare. See PLAIN.]

To make plain, manifest, or intelligible; to clear of obscurity; to expound; to illustrate by discourse, or by notes. The first business of a preacher is to explain his text. Notes and comments are intended to explain the Scriptures.

EX-PLAIN', v. i. To give explanations.

EX-PLAIN'A-BLE, a. That may be cleared of obscurity; capable of being made plain to the understanding; capable of being interpreted. Brown.

EX-PLAIN'ED, (eks-plānd',) pp. Made clear or obvious to the understanding; cleared of doubt, ambiguity, or obscurity; expounded; illustrated.

EX-PLAIN'ER, n. One who explains; an expositor; a commentator; an interpreter. Harris.

EX-PLAIN'ING, ppr. or a. Expounding; illustrating; interpreting; opening to the understanding; clearing of obscurity.

EX-PLA-NA'TION, n. [L. explanatio.]

1. The act of explaining, expounding, or interpreting; exposition; illustration; interpretation; the act of clearing from obscurity and making intelligible; as, the explanation of a passage in Scripture, or of a contract or treaty.

2. The sense given by an expounder or interpreter.

3. A mutual exposition of terms, meaning, or motives, with a view to adjust a misunderstanding, and reconcile differences. Hence, reconciliation, agreement, or good understanding of parties who have been at variance. The parties have come to an explanation.

EX-PLAN'A-TO-RI-NESS, n. A being explanatory.

EX-PLAN'A-TO-RY, a. Serving to explain; containing explanation; as, explanatory notes.

EX'PLE-TIVE, a. [Fr. expletif, from L. expleo, to fill.]

Filling; added for supply or ornament.

EX'PLE-TIVE, n. In language, a word or syllable not necessary to the sense, but inserted to fill a vacancy, or for ornament. The Greek language abounds with expletives.

EX'PLE-TO-RY, a. Serving to fill.

EX'PLI-CA-BLE, a. [L. explicabilis. See EXPLICATE.]

1. Explainable; that may be unfolded to the mind; that may be made intelligible. Many difficulties in old authors are not explicable.

2. That may be accounted for. The conduct and measures of the administration are not explicable by the usual rules of judging.

EX'PLI-CATE, v. t. [L. explico, to unfold; ex and plico, to fold; Fr. expliquer; Sp. explicar; It. spiegare.]

1. To unfold; to expand; to open. "They explicate the leaves." Blackmore.

[In this sense the word is not common, and hardly admissible.]

2. To unfold the meaning or sense; to explain; to clear of difficulties or obscurity; to interpret.

The last verse of his last satyr is not yet sufficiently explicated. Dryden.

EX'PLI-CA-TED, pp. Unfolded; explained.

EX'PLI-CA-TING, ppr. Unfolding; explaining; interpreting.

EX-PLI-CA'TION, n. The act of opening or unfolding.

2. The act of explaining; explanation; exposition; interpretation; as, the explication of the parables of our Savior.

3. The sense given by an expositor or interpreter. Johnson.

EX'PLI-CA-TIVE, } a. Serving to unfold or ex-
EX'PLI-CA-TO-RY, } plain; tending to lay open to the understanding. Watts.

EX'PLI-CA-TOR, n. One who unfolds or explains; an expounder.

EX-PLIC'IT, (eks-plis'it,) a. [L. explicitus, part. of explico, to unfold.]

Literally, unfolded. Hence, plain in language; open to the understanding; clear; not obscure or ambiguous; express, not merely implied. An explicit proposition or declaration is that in which the words, in their common acceptation, express the true meaning of the person who utters them, and in which there is no ambiguity or disguise.

2. Plain; open; clear; unreserved; having no disguised meaning or reservation; applied to persons. He was explicit in his terms.

EX'PLIC-IT, (eks'ple-sit.) [L.] A word formerly used at the conclusion of books, as finis is now used.

EX-PLIC'IT-LY, adv. Plainly; expressly; without duplicity; without disguise or reservation of meaning; not by inference or implication. He explicitly avows his intention.

EX-PLIC'IT-NESS, n. Plainness of language or expression; clearness; direct expression of ideas or intention, without reserve or ambiguity.

EX-PLŌDE', v. i. [L. explodo; ex and plaudo, to utter a burst of sound; from the root of loud.]

Properly, to burst forth, as sound; to utter a report with sudden violence. Hence, to burst and expand with force and a violent report, as an elastic fluid. We say, gunpowder explodes on the application of fire; a volcano explodes; a meteor explodes.

EX-PLŌDE', v. t. To decry or reject with noise; to express disapprobation of, with noise or marks of contempt; as, to explode a play on the stage. Hence,

2. To reject with any marks of disapprobation or disdain; to treat with contempt, and drive from notice; to drive into disrepute; or, in general, to condemn; to reject; to cry down. Astrology is now exploded.

3. To drive out with violence and noise. [Little used.]

The kindled powder exploded the ball. Blackmore.

EX-PLŌD'ED, pp. or a. Burst with violence; driven away by hisses or noise; rejected with disapprobation or contempt; condemned; cried down.

EX-PLŌD'ER, n. One who explodes; a hisser; one who rejects.

EX-PLŌD'ING, ppr. Bursting and expanding with force and a violent report; rejecting with marks of disapprobation or contempt; rejecting; condemning.

EX-PLOIT', n. [Fr. exploit; Norm. exploit, esploit, dispatch; expleiter, to be dispatched, exercised, or employed; ploit, dispatch; Arm. espled, espledi, explet.]

1. A deed or act; more especially, a heroic act; a deed of renown; a great or noble achievement; as, the exploits of Alexander, of Cesar, of Washington. [EXPLOITURE, in a like sense, is not in use.]

2. In a ludicrous sense, a great act of wickedness.

EX-PLOIT', v. t. To achieve. [Not in use.] Camden.

EX-PLŌ'RATE, v. t. To explore. [Not used.] [See EXPLORE.]

EX-PLO-RA'TION, n. [See EXPLORE.] The act of exploring; close search; strict or careful examination. Boyle.

EX'PLO-RA-TOR, n. One who explores; one who searches or examines closely.

EX-PLOR'A-TO-RY, a. Serving to explore; searching; examining.

EX-PLŌRE', v. t. [L. exploro; ex and ploro, to cry out, to wail, to bawl. The compound appears to convey a very different sense from the simple verb ploro; but the primary sense is, to stretch, strain, drive; applied to the voice, it is to strain or press out sounds or words; applied to the eyes, it is to stretch or reach, as in prying curiosity.]

1. To search for making discovery; to view with care; to examine closely by the eye. Moses sent spies to explore the land of Canaan.

2. To search by any means; to try; as, to explore the deep by a plummet or lead.

3. To search or pry into; to scrutinize; to inquire with care; to examine closely with a view to discover truth; as, to explore the depths of science.

EX-PLŌR'ED, pp. or a. Searched; viewed; examined closely.

EX-PLŌRE'MENT, n Search; trial. [Little used.] Brown.

EX-PLŌR'ER, n. One who explores.

EX-PLŌR'ING, ppr. or a. Searching; viewing; examining with care.

EX-PLŌ'SION, (eks-plō'zhun,) n. [from explode.] A bursting with noise; a bursting or sudden expansion of any elastic fluid, with force and a loud report; as, the explosion of powder.

2. The discharge of a piece of ordnance with a loud report.

3. The sudden burst of sound in a volcano, &c.

EX-PLŌ'SIVE, a. Driving or bursting out with violence and noise; causing explosion; as, the explosive force of gunpowder. Woodward.

EX-PLŌ'SIVE-LY, adv. In an explosive manner.

EX-PO-LI-A'TION, n. [L. expoliatio.]

A spoiling; a wasting. [See SPOLIATION.]

EX-POL'ISH, for POLISH; a useless word.

EX-PŌ'NENT, n. [L. exponens; expono, to expose or set forth; ex and pono, to place.]

1. In algebra, the exponent or index of a power is the number or letter which, placed above a quantity at the right hand, denotes how often that quantity is repeated as a factor, to produce the power. Thus a^2 denotes the second power of a: a^4 denotes the fourth power of a: a^x denotes the xth power of a, or a repeated as a factor x times. A fractional exponent or index is used to denote the root of a quantity. Thus $a^{\frac{1}{3}}$ denotes the third or cube root of a. Day's Algebra. Barlow.

2. Exponent of a ratio; a term or phrase sometimes used to denote the quotient arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent. Thus six is the exponent of the ratio of thirty to five. But some mathematicians, as Kepler, Halley, &c., consider logarithms as the exponents of ratios. Barlow. Brande.

3. Figuratively, one that stands as an index or representative; as the leader of a party is the exponent of its principles.

EX-PO-NEN'TIAL, a. Pertaining to exponents.

Exponential quantity; in algebra, a quantity whose exponent is unknown or variable. Hutton.

Exponential equation; an equation which contains an exponential quantity. Hutton.

Exponential curve; a curve whose nature is defined by means of an exponential equation. Hutton.

EX-PŌPE', n. A pope deposed, or dismissed from office. McGavin.

EX-PŌRT', v. t. [L. exporto; ex and porto, to carry. Porto seems allied to fero, and Eng. bear. Class Br.]

To carry out; but appropriately, and perhaps exclusively, to convey or transport, in traffic, produce, and goods from one country to another, or from one state or jurisdiction to another, either by water or land. We export wares and merchandise from the United States to Europe. The Northern States export manufactures to South Carolina and Georgia. Goods are exported from Persia to Syria and Egypt on camels.

EX'PŌRT, n. A commodity actually conveyed from one country or state to another in traffic, or a commodity which may be exported; used chiefly in the plural, exports. We apply the word to goods or produce actually carried abroad, or to such as are usually exported in commerce.

EX-PŌRT'A-BLE, a. That may be exported.

EX-PŌR-TA'TION, n. The act of exporting; the act of conveying goods and productions from one country or state to another in the course of commerce. A country is benefited or enriched by the exportation of its surplus productions.

2. The act of carrying out.

EX-PŌRT'ED, pp. or a. Carried out of a country or state in traffic.

EX-PŌRT'ER, n. The person who exports; the person who ships goods, wares, and merchandise of any kind to a foreign country, or who sends them to market in a distant country or state; opposed to importer.

EX-PŌRT'ING, ppr. Conveying to a foreign country, or to another state, as goods, produce, or manufactures.

EX'PŌRT-TRADE, n. The trade which consists in the exportation of commodities.

EX-PŌS'AL, n. Exposure. [Not in use.] Swift.

EX-PŌSE', (eks-pōze',) v. t. [Fr. exposer; L. expositum, from expono; ex and pono, to place; It. esporre, for esponere. The radical sense of pono is to set or place, or rather to throw or thrust down. To expose is to set or throw open, or to thrust forth.]

1. To lay open; to set to public view; to disclose; to uncover or draw from concealment; as, to expose the secret artifices of a court; to expose a plan or design.

2. To make bare; to uncover; to remove from any thing that which guards or protects; as, to expose the head or the breast to the air.

3. To remove from shelter; to place in a situation to be affected or acted on; as, to expose one's self to violent heat.

4. To lay open to attack, by any means; as, to expose an army or garrison.

5. To make liable; to subject; as, to expose one's self to pain, grief, or toil; to expose one's self to insult.

6. To put in the power of; as, to expose one's self to the seas.

Digitized by Google

7. To lay open to censure, ridicule, or contempt.

A fool might once himself alone expose. Pope.

8. To lay open, in almost any manner; as, to expose one's self to examination or scrutiny.

9. To put in danger. The good soldier never shrinks from exposing himself, when duty requires it.

10. To cast out to chance; to place abroad, or in a situation unprotected. Some nations expose their children.

11. To lay open; to make public. Be careful not unnecessarily to expose the faults of a neighbor.

12. To offer; to place in a situation to invite purchasers; as, to expose goods to sale.

13. To offer to inspection; as, to expose paintings in a gallery.

EX-PO-SÉ', (eks-po-zā',) n. [Fr.] A laying open; a formal statement, recital, or exposition; a useless word.

EX-PŌS'ED, pp. or a. Laid open; laid bare; uncovered; unprotected; made liable to attack; offered for sale; disclosed; made public; offered to view.

EX-PŌS'ED-NESS, n. A state of being exposed, open to attack, or unprotected; as, an exposedness to sin or temptation. Edwards.

EX-PŌS'ER, n. One who exposes.

EX-PŌS'ING, ppr. Lying or laying open; making bare; putting in danger; disclosing; placing in any situation without protection; offering to inspection or to sale.

EX-PO-SI''TION, (eks-po-zish'un,) n. A laying open; a setting to public view.

2. A situation in which a thing is exposed or laid open, or in which it has an unobstructed view, or in which a free passage to it is open; as, a house has an easterly exposition, an exposition to the south, or to a southern prospect. The exposition gives a free access to the air or to the sun's rays. Arbuthnot.

3. Explanation; interpretation; a laying open the sense or meaning of an author, or of any passage in a writing. Dryden.

4. A work containing explanations or interpretations.

EX-POS'I-TIVE, a. Explanatory; laying open. Pearson.

EX-POS'I-TOR, n. [L.] One who expounds or explains; an interpreter. South.

2. A book which expounds and explains.

EX-POS'I-TO-RY, a. Serving to explain; tending to illustrate. Johnson.

EX PŌST FAC'TO, [L.] In law, done after another thing. An estate granted may be made good by matter ex post facto, which was not good at first.

An ex post facto law, in criminal cases, consists in declaring an act penal or criminal, which was innocent when done; or in raising the grade of an offense, making it greater than it was when committed, or increasing the punishment after the commission of the offense; or in altering the rules of evidence, so as to allow differen or less evidence to convict the offender, than was required when the offense was committed. Sergeant.

An ex post facto law, is one that renders an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable at the time it was committed. Cranch, Reports.

This definition is distinguished for its comprehensive brevity and precision. Kent's Commentaries.

In a free government, no person can be subjected to punishment by an ex post facto law.

F.

F, the sixth letter of the English alphabet, is a labial articulation, formed by placing the upper teeth on the under lip, and accompanied with an emission of breath. F in English has one uniform sound, as in father, after. Its kindred letter is v, which is chiefly distinguished from f by being more vocal, or accompanied with more sound, as may be perceived by pronouncing ef, ev. This letter may be derived from the Oriental ו vau, or from פ pe or phe; most probably the former. The Latins received the letter from the Eolians in Greece, who wrote it in the form of a double gamma, Ғ; whence it has been called a digamma. It corresponds in power to the Greek φ, phi, and its proper name is ef.

As a Latin numeral, it signifies 40, and with a dash over the top, F̄, forty thousand.

In the civil law, two of these letters together, ff, signify the pandects.

In English criminal law, this letter is branded on felons, when admitted to the benefit of clergy; by stat. 4 H. VII. c. 13.

In medical prescriptions, F. stands for fiat, let it be made; F. S. A. fiat secundum artem.

F stands also for fellow; F. R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.

F, or f'd, in music, is the fourth note rising in this order in the gamut, do, [or ut,] re, mi, fa. It denotes, also, one of the Greek keys in music, destined for the base.

FAF'FEL, v. i. To stammer. [Not in use.] Barret.

FAG, v. t. To beat; to compel to drudge. [Colloquial.] Smart.

FAG, n. A laborious drudge; a drudge for another. In the English schools, this term is applied to a boy who does menial services for another boy of a higher form or class. [Colloquial.] Grose. Edgeworth.

FAG, v. i. [Scot. faik. Qu. Heb. Ch. Syr. נפג, to fail, to languish. See Class Bg, No. 44, 60, 76.]

To drudge; to labor to weariness; to become weary. Rich. Dict.

The Italians began to fag. Mackenzie.

[Colloquial.]

FAG, n. A knot or coarse part in cloth. [Not in use.]

FAG'-END', n. [fag and end. See FAG, v. i. supra.]

1. The end of a web of cloth, generally of coarser materials. Johnson.

2. The refuse or meaner part of any thing. Collier.

3. Among seamen, the untwisted end of a rope; hence, to be fagged, or fagged out, is to become untwisted and loose. Totten.

We observe that the use of this word among seamen leads to the true sense of the verb, as well as the noun. The sense is, to open by receding, or to yield and become lax, and hence weak.

FAG'GING, n. Laborious drudgery; the acting as a drudge for another at an English school.

FAG'OT, n. [W. fagod; Gr. φακελλος; connected with W. fag, that which unites or meets; fagiad, a gathering round a point; Scot. faik, to fold, to grasp; fake, in seamen's language, a coil; allied to Sax. fegan, gefegan, to unite. (See FADGE.) The sense is, a bundle or collection, like pack.]

1. A bundle of sticks, twigs, or small branches of trees, used for fuel, or for raising batteries, filling ditches, and other purposes in fortification. The French use fascine, from the L. fascis, a bundle; a term now adopted in English.

2. A bundle of pieces of iron for re-manufacture.

3. A person hired to appear at musters in a company not full, and hide the deficiency. Encyc.

FAG'OT, v. t. To tie together; to bind in a bundle; to collect promiscuously. Dryden.

FAH'LERZ, n. Gray copper, or gray copper ore, called by Jameson tetrahedral copper pyrites. It contains copper, antimony, arsenic, and sulphur. This mineral is easily broken, and its fracture usually uneven, but sometimes a little conchoidal. It is found amorphous and in regular crystals. Dana.

FAH'LUN-ITE, n. [from Fahlun, in Sweden.]

A mineral occurring in opaque, brownish-green, six-sided prisms, transversely foliated. It has nearly the composition of iolite, except the addition of 13 per cent. of water, and is supposed to proceed from the alteration of iolite. The chlorophyllite is a similar mineral, containing about 4 per cent. of water. Dana.

FAI-ENCE', (fā-yāns',) n. [from Faenza, the original place of manufacture.] In the fine arts, imitation porcelain; a kind of fine pottery, embellished with painted designs. Brande. Encyc. Am.

FAIL, v. i. [Fr. faillir; W. faelu, or pallu and aballu; Scot. failye; It. fallire; Sp. falir, faltar; Port. falhar; L. fallo; Ir. feallam; Gr. φηλεω, φηλοω, whence σφαλλω; D. feilen, faalen; G. fehlen; Sw. fela; Dan. fejler; Arm. fallaat, feltel, whence falloni, wickedness, Eng. felony. It seems to be allied to fall, fallow, pale, and many other words. See Class Bl, No. 6, 7, 8, 13, 18, 21, 28.]

1. To become deficient; to be insufficient; to cease to be abundant for supply; or to be entirely wanting. We say, in a dry season, the springs and streams fail, or are failing, before they are entirely exhausted. We say, also, the springs failed, when they entirely ceased to flow. Crops fail wholly or partially.

2. To decay; to decline; to sink; to be diminished. We say of a sick person, his strength fails daily.

3. To decline; to decay; to sink; to become weaker; as, the patient fails every hour.

4. To be extinct; to cease; to be entirely wanting; to be no longer produced.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men. — Ps. xii.

5. To be entirely exhausted; to be wanting; to cease from supply.

Money failed in the land of Egypt, — Gen. xlvii.

6. To cease; to perish; to be lost.

12. To miss; to miscarry; to be frustrated or disappointed. The enemy attacked the fort, but failed in his design, or failed of success.

13. To be neglected; to fall short; not to be executed. The promises of a man of probity seldom fail. The soul or the spirit fails, when a person is discouraged. The eyes fail, when the desires and expectations are long delayed, and the person is disappointed.

14. To become insolvent or bankrupt. When merchants and traders fail, they are said to become bankrupt. When other men fail, they are said to become insolvent.

FAIL, v. t. To desert; to disappoint; to cease or to neglect or omit to afford aid, supply, or strength. It is said, fortune never fails the brave. Our friends sometimes fail us, when we most need them. The aged attempt to walk, when their limbs fail them. In bold enterprises, courage should never fail the hero.

2. To omit; not to perform.

The inventive God, who never fails his part. Dryden.

3. To be wanting to.

There shall never fail thee a man on the throne. — 1 Kings ii.

[In the transitive use of this verb, there is really an ellipsis of from or to, or other word. In strictness, the verb is not transitive, and the passive participle is, I believe, never used.]

FAIL, n. Omission; non-performance.

He will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites. — Josh. iii.

2. Miscarriage; failure; deficience; want; death. [In this sense little used.]

FAIL'ANCE, n. Fault; failure. [Obs.]

FAIL'ED, pret. and pp. of FAIL. Become deficient; ceased.

FAIL'ING, ppr. or a. Becoming deficient or insufficient; becoming weaker; decaying; declining; omitting; not executing or performing; miscarrying; neglecting; wanting; becoming bankrupt or insolvent.

FAIL'ING, n. The act of failing; deficiency; imperfection; lapse; fault. Failings, in a moral sense, are minor faults, proceeding rather from weakness of intellect, or from carelessness, than from bad motives. But the word is often abusively applied to vices of the grosser kind.

2. The act of failing or becoming insolvent.

FAIL'ING-LY, adv. By failing.

FAIL'URE, (fāil'yur,) n. A failing; deficience; cessation of supply, or total defect; as, the failure of springs or streams; failure of rain; failure of crops.

2. Omission; non-performance; as, the failure of a promise; a man's failure in the execution of a trust.

3. Decay, or defect from decay; as, the failure of memory or of sight.

4. A breaking, or becoming insolvent. At the close of a war, the prices of commodities fall, and innumerable failures succeed.

5. A failing; a slight fault. [Little used.]

FAIN, a. [Sax. fagen, fægan, glad; fagnian, Goth. faginon, to rejoice; Sw. fägen. Class Bg, No. 3, 43, 77.]

Glad; pleased; rejoiced. But the appropriate sense of the word is glad, or pleased to do something under some kind of necessity; that is, glad to evade evil or secure good. Thus, says Locke, "The learned Castalio was fain to make trenches at Basil, to keep himself from starving." This appropriation of the word, which is modern, led Dr. Johnson into a mistake in defining the word. The proper signification is glad, joyful.

FAIN, adv. Gladly; with joy or pleasure.

He would fain flee out of his hand. — Job xxvii.
He would fain have filled his belly with husks. — Luke xv.

FAIN, v. i. To wish or desire. [Not used.]

FAIN'ING, ppr. or a. Wishing; desiring fondly.

In his faining eye. Spenser.

FAINT, a. [Ir. faine, a weakening; fann, weak; fanntais, weakness, inclination to faint; anbhfainne, fainting; Fr. faineant, idle, sluggish. This word is perhaps allied to Fr. faner, to fade, wither, decay, to make hay, foin, L. fœnum; and to vain, L. vanus, whence to vanish, Ar. فَنِيَ fani, to vanish, to fail, Eng. to wane, Sax. fynig, musty. Class Bn, No. 25.]

1. Weak; languid; inclined to swoon; as, to be rendered faint by excessive evacuations.

2. Weak; feeble; languid; exhausted; as, faint with fatigue, hunger, or thirst.

3. Weak, as color; not bright or vivid; not strong; as, a faint color; a faint red or blue; a faint light.

My heart is faint. — Lam. i.

FAINT, v. i. To lose the animal functions; to lose strength and color, and become senseless and motionless; to swoon; sometimes with away. He fainted for loss of blood.

On hearing the honor intended her, she fainted away. Guardian.

2. To become feeble; to decline or fail in strength and vigor; to be weak.

If I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way. — Mark viii.

3. To sink into dejection; to lose courage or spirit.

Let not your hearts faint. — Deut. xx.
If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small. — Prov. xxiv.

4. To decay; to disappear; to vanish.

Gilded clouds, while we gaze on them, faint before the eye. Pope.

FAINT, v. t. To deject; to depress; to weaken. [Unusual.] Shak.

FAINT-HEART'ED, a. Cowardly; timorous; dejected; easily depressed, or yielding to fear.

Fear not, neither be fainthearted. — Is. vii.

FAINT-HEART'ED-LY, adv In a cowardly manner.

FAINT-HEART'ED-NESS, n. Cowardice; timorousness; want of courage.

FAINT'ING, ppr. or a. Falling into a swoon; failing; losing strength or courage; becoming feeble or timid.

FAINT'ING, n. A temporary loss of strength, color, and respiration; syncope; deliquium; leipothymy; a swoon. Wiseman.

FAINT'ISH, a. Slightly faint.

FAINT'ISH-NESS, n. A slight degree of faintness. Arbuthnot.

FAINT'LING, a. Timorous; feeble-minded. [Not used.] Arbuthnot.

FAINT'LY, adv. In a feeble, languid manner; without vigor or activity; as, to attack or defend faintly.

2. With a feeble flame; as, a torch burns faintly.

3. With a feeble light; as, the candle burns faintly.

4. With little force; as, to breathe faintly.

FAIR, n. Elliptically, a fair woman; a handsome female.

The fair; the female sex.

2. Fairness; applied to things or persons. [Not in use.]

FAIR, n. [Fr. foire; W. fair; Arm. foar, foer, feur, or for; L. forum, or feriæ. The It. fiera, and Sp. feria, a fair, are the L. feriæ, a holiday, a day exempt from labor; G. feier, whence feiern, to rest from labor. If fair is from forum, it may coincide in origin with Gr. πωρεύω, εμπορεύομαι, to trade, whence εμπορίον, emporium, the primary sense of which is to pass. In Norman French we find fair and feire. If fair is from feriæ, it is so called from being held in places where the wakes or feasts at the dedication of churches were held, or from the feasts themselves. It is a fact that Sundays were formerly market days.]

A stated market in a particular town or city; a stated meeting of buyers and sellers for trade. A fair is annual or more frequent. The privilege of holding fairs is granted by the king or supreme power. Among the most celebrated fairs in Europe are those of Francfort and Leipsic in Germany; of Novi in the Milanese; of Riga and Archangel in Russia; of Lyons and St. Germain in France. In Great Britain many towns enjoy this privilege. Encyc.

In the United States, there are no fairs similar to those in England; at least I know of none. The ladies sometimes hold fairs for the sale of their work for charitable purposes. These are called, in England, FANCY-FAIRS.

FAIR'-HAIR-ED, a. Having fair hair.

FAIR'-HAND, a. Having a fair appearance. Shak.

FAITH, n. [W. fyz; Arm. feiz: L. fides; It. fede; Port. and Sp. fe; Fr. foi; Gr. πιστις; L. fido, to trust; Gr. πειθω, to persuade, to draw toward any thing, to conciliate; πειθομαι, to believe, to obey. In the Greek Lexicon of Hederic, it is said, the primitive signification of the verb is to bind and draw or lead, as πειρα signifies a rope or cable, as does πεισμα. But this remark is a little incorrect. The sense of the verb, from which that of rope and binding is derived, is to strain, to draw, and thus to bind or make fast. A rope or cable is that which makes fast. Qu. Heb. Ch. Syr. Sam. בטח. Class Bd, No. 16.]

1. Belief; the assent of the mind to the truth of what is declared by another, resting on his authority and veracity, without other evidence; the judgment that what another states or testifies is the truth. I have strong faith, or no faith, in the testimony of a witness, or in what a historian narrates.

2. The assent of the mind to the truth of a proposition advanced by another; belief, on probable evidence of any kind.

3. In theology, the assent of the mind or understanding to the truth of what God has revealed. Simple belief of the Scriptures, of the being and perfections of God, and of the existence, character, and doctrines of Christ, founded on the testimony of the sacred writers, is called historical or speculative faith; a faith little distinguished from the belief of the existence and achievements of Alexander or of Cesar.

4. Evangelical, justifying, or saving faith, is the assent of the mind to the truth of divine revelation, on the authority of God's testimony, accompanied with a cordial assent of the will or approbation of the heart; an entire confidence or trust in God's character and declarations, and in the character and doctrines of Christ, with an unreserved surrender of the will to his guidance, and dependence on his merits for salvation. In other words, that firm belief of God's testimony and of the truth of the gospel, which influences the will, and leads to an entire reliance on Christ for salvation.

Being justified by faith. — Rom. v.
Without faith it is impossible to please God. — Heb. xi.
For we walk by faith, and not by sight. — 2 Cor. v.

FALL, v. i.; pret. FELL; pp. FALLEN. [Sax. feallan; G. fallen; D. vallen; Sw falla; Dan. falder; allied probably to L. fallo, to fail, to deceive, Gr. σφαλλω; Sp. hallar, to find, to fall on; Fr. affaler, to lower. See Class Bl, No. 18, 28, 43, 49, 52. Fall coincides exactly with the Shemitic נפל, Heb. Ch. Syr. and Sam. to fall. Fail agrees better with the Heb. נכל, and הכל; but these words may have had one primitive root, the sense of which was to move, to recede, to pass. As these words are unquestionably the same in the Shemitic and Japhetic languages, they afford decisive evidence that the נ, or first letter of the Shemitic words, is a prefix. The Chaldee sense of נבל is to defile, to make foul. (See FOUL.) The same verb in Ar. نبل nabala, signifies to shoot, to drive, or throw an arrow, Gr. βαλλω.]

FAR'DEL, v. t. To make up in bundles. Fuller.
FAR'DING-BAG, n. The first stomach of a cow, or other ruminant animal, where green food lies until it is chewed over again. Gard.
FARE, v. i. [Sax. faran, Goth. faran, to go; D. vaaren; G. fahren; Sw. fara; Dan. farer. This word may be connected in origin with the Heb. Ch. Syr. Sam. עבר, Ar. عبر abara, to go, to pass; or with افر afara, to pass, or pass over, which seems to be radically the same word as نفر nafara, to flee.
This coincides with the Eth. ወፈረ wafar, to go, to pass, Gr. πορευω, Ir. bara. Class Br, No. 23, 37, 41.]
1. To go; to pass; to move forward; to travel.
So on he fares, and to the border comes
Of Eden. Milton.
[In this literal sense the word is not in common use.]
2. To be in any state, good or bad; to be attended with any circumstances or train of events, fortunate or unfortunate.
So fares the stag among the enraged hounds. Denham.
So fared the knight between two foes. Hudibras.
He fared very well; he fared very ill. Go further and fare worse. The sense is taken from going, having a certain course; hence, being subjected to a certain train of incidents. The rich man fared sumptuously every day. He enjoyed all the pleasure which wealth and luxury could afford. Luke xvi.
3. To feed; to be entertained. We fared well; we had a good table, and courteous treatment.
4. To proceed in a train of consequences, good or bad.
So fares it when with truth falsehood contends. Milton.
5. To happen well or ill; with it impersonally. We shall see how it will fare with him.
FARE, n. The price of passage or going; the sum paid or due for conveying a person by land or water; as, the fare for crossing a river, called, also, ferriage; the fare for conveyance in a coach; stage-fare. The price of conveyance over the ocean is now usually called the passage, or passage-money. Fare is never used for the price of conveying goods; this is called freight or transportation.
2. Food; provisions of the table. We lived on coarse fare; or, we had delicious fare.
3. The person conveyed in a vehicle. [Not in use in the United States.] Drummond.
FARE-WELL', a compound of fare, in the imperative, and well. Go well; originally applied to a person departing, but by custom now applied both to those who depart and those who remain. It expresses a kind wish, a wish of happiness to those who leave, or those who are left.
The verb and adverb are often separated by the pronoun; fare you well; I wish you a happy departure; may you be well in your absence.
It is sometimes an expression of separation only. Farewell the year; farewell, ye sweet groves; that is, I take my leave of you.
FARE-WELL', n. A wish of happiness or welfare at parting; the parting compliment; adieu.
2. Leave; act of departure.
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun. Shak.
Before I take my farewell of the subject. Addison.
FA-RI'NA, n. [L. farina, meal.]
1. In botany, the pollen, fine dust, or powder, contained in the anthers of plants, and which is supposed to fall on the stigma, and fructify the plant.
2. The flour of any species of corn, or starchy root, such as the potato, &c. Ure.
3. In chemistry, starch or fecula, one of the proximate principles of vegetables.
FAR-I-NA'CEOUS, a. [from L. farina, meal.]
1. Consisting or made of meal or flour; as, a farinaceous diet, which consists of the meal or flour of the various species of corn or grain.
2. Yielding farina or flour; as, farinaceous seeds.
3. Like meal; mealy; pertaining to meal; as, a farinaceous taste or smell.
FAR'I-NŌSE, a. In natural history, mealy; covered with a sort of white, scurfy substance, as the leaves of some poplars. Lindley. Humble.
FAR'LIES, n. pl. Unusual, unexpected things. [Not in use.] Cumberland dialect.
FARM, n. [Sax. farma, fearm, or feorm, food, provisions, board, a meal, a dinner or supper, hospitality, substance, goods, use, fruit. Hence, feormian, to supply provisions, to entertain; also, to purge, or purify, to expiate, to avail, to profit. Arm. ferm, or feurm; in ancient laws, firma; Fr. ferme, a farm, or letting to farm, whence affermer, to hire or lease. The sense of feorm seems to be corn or provisions, in which formerly rents were paid. The radical sense of feorm, provisions, is probably produce, issues, from one of the verbs in Br; produce and purification both implying separation, a throwing off or out.]
1. A tract of land leased on rent reserved; ground let to a tenant on condition of his paying a certain sum annually, or otherwise, for the use of it. A farm is usually such a portion of land as is cultivated by one man, and includes the buildings and fences. Rents were formerly paid in provisions, or the produce of land; but now they are generally paid in money.

This is the signification of farm in Great Britain, where most of the land is leased to cultivators.

2. In the United States, a portion or tract of land, consisting usually of grass land, meadow, pasture, tillage, and woodland, cultivated by one man, and usually owned by him in fee. A like tract of land under lease is called a farm; but most cultivators are proprietors of the land, and called farmers.

A tract of new land, covered with forest, if intended to be cultivated by one man as owner, is also called a farm. A man goes into the new States, or into the unsettled country, to buy a farm, that is, land for a farm.

3. The state of land leased on rent reserved; a lease.

It is great willfulness in landlords to make any longer farms to their tenants. Spenser.

FARM, v. t. To lease, as land, on rent reserved; to let to a tenant on condition of paying rent.

We are enforced to farm our royal realm. Shak.

[In this sense, I believe, the word is not used in America.]

2. To take at a certain rent or rate. [Not used in America.]

3. To lease or let, as taxes impost, or other duties, at a certain sum or rate per cent. It is customary, in many countries, for the prince or government to farm the revenues, the taxes or rents, the imposts and excise, to individuals, who are to collect and pay them to the government at a certain per centage or rate per cent.

4. To take or hire for a certain rate per cent.

5. To cultivate land.

To farm let, or let to farm, is to lease on rent.

FAR'THING, n. [Sax. feorthung, from feorth, fourth, from feower, four.]

1. The fourth of a penny; a small copper coin of Great Britain, being the fourth of a penny in value. In America, we have no coin of this kind. We, however, use the word to denote the fourth part of a penny in value; but the penny is of different value from the English penny, and different in different states. It is becoming obsolete with the old denominations of money.

2. Farthings, in the plural; copper coin. Gay.

3. Very small price or value. It is not worth a farthing; that is, it is of very little worth, or worth

4. A division of land. [Not now used.] [nothing.

Thirty acres make a farthing-land; nine farthings a Cornish acre; and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. Carew.

FAR'THIN''GALE, n. [This is a compound word, but it is not easy to analyze it. The French has vertugadin; the Sp. verdugado; Port. verdugada; which do not well correspond with the English word. The Italian has guardinfanto, infant-guard; and it has been said that the hoop petticoat was first worn by pregnant women.]

A hoop petticoat; or circles of hoops, formed of whalebone, used to extend the petticoat.

FAR'THINGS-WORTH, (-wurth,) n. As much as is sold for a farthing Arbuthnot.

FEE, n. [Sax. feo, feoh; D. vee; G. vieh; Sw. fa; Dan. fæe; Scot. fee, fey, or fie, cattle; L. pecu, pecus. From the use of cattle in transferring property, or from barter and payments in cattle, the word came to signify money; it signified, also, goods, substance in general. The word belongs to Class Bg, but the primary sense is not obvious.]

A reward or compensation for services; recompense, either gratuitous, or established by law, and claimed of right. It is applied particularly to the reward of professional services; as, the fees of lawyers and physicians; the fees of office; clerk's fees; sheriff's fees; marriage fees, &c. Many of these are fixed by law; but gratuities to professional men are also called fees.

FEE, n. [This word is usually deduced from Sax. feoh, cattle, property, and fee, a reward. This is a mistake. Fee, in land, is a contraction of feud or fief, or from the same source; It. feele, Sp. fe, faith, trust. Fee, a reward, from feoh, is a Teutonic word; but fee, feud, fief, are words wholly unknown to the Teutonic nations, who use, as synonymous with them, the word which in English is loan. This word fee, in land or an estate in trust, was first used among the descendants of the northern conquerors of Italy, but it originated in the south of Europe. See FEUD.]

Primarily, a loan of land, an estate in trust, granted by a prince or lord, to be held by the grantee on condition of personal service, or other condition; and, if the grantee or tenant failed to perform the conditions, the land reverted to the lord or donor, called the landlord, or lend-lord, the lord of the loan. A fee, then, is any land or tenement held of a superior on certain conditions. It is synonymous with fief and feud. All the land in England, except the crown land, is of this kind. Fees are absolute or limited. An absolute fee, or fee-simple, is land which a man holds to himself and his heirs forever, who are called tenants in fee-simple. Hence, in modern times, the term fee or fee-simple denotes an estate of inheritance; and, in America, where lands are not generally held of a superior, a fee, or fee-simple, is an estate in which the owner has the whole property, without any condition annexed to the tenure. A limited fee, is an estate limited or clogged with certain conditions; as, a qualified or base fee, which ceases with the existence of certain conditions; and a conditional fee, which is limited to particular heirs. Blackstone. Encyc.

In the United States, an estate in fee, or fee-simple, is what is called in English law an allodial estate, an estate held by a person in his own right, and descendible to the heirs in general.

FEE'-FĀRM, n. [fee and farm.] A kind of tenure of estates without homage, fealty, or other service, except that mentioned in the feoffment, which is usually the full rent. The nature of this tenure is, that if the rent is in arrear or unpaid for two years, the feoffor and his heirs may have an action for the recovery of the lands. Encyc.

FEE'-SIM'PLE. See FEE.

FEE'-TĀIL, n. An estate entailed; a conditional fee.

FEE, v. t. To pay a fee to; to reward. Hence,

2. To engage in one's service by advancing a fee or sum of money to; as, to fee a lawyer.

FEL'LOW, n. [Sax. felaw; Scot. falow, from follow. In an old author, fellowship is written folowship.]

1. A companion; an associate.

In youth I had twelve fellows, like myself. Ascham.
Each on his fellow for assistance calls. Dryden.

2. One of the same kind.

A shepherd had one favorite dog; he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows. L'Estrange.

3. An equal.

Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith Jehovah of hosts. — Zech. xiii.

4. One of a pair, or of two things used together, and suited to each other. Of a pair of gloves, we call one the fellow of the other.

5. One equal or like another. Of an artist we say, this man has not his fellow, that is, one of like skill.

6. An appellation of contempt; a man without good breeding or worth; an ignoble man; as, a mean fellow.

Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow. Pope.

The exterior part or rim of a wheel, supported by the spokes.

FE'LO DE SE, [L.] In law, one who commits felony by suicide, or deliberately destroys his own life.

FEL'ON, n. [Fr. felon; Low L. felo; Arm. fellon; It. fello, or fellone, a thief. I accord with Spelman in deducing this word from the root of fail, the original signification being, a vassal who failed in his fidelity or allegiance to his lord, and committed an offense by which he forfeited his feud. Hence, in French, felon is traitorous, rebellious. So the word is explained and deduced in Gregoire's Armoric Dictionary. The derivation from fee and lon, in Spelman, copied by Blackstone, is unnatural.]

1. In law, a person who has committed felony. [See FELONY.]

2. A whitlow; a painful swelling formed in the periosteum at the end of the finger. Wiseman.

FEL'ON, a. Malignant; fierce; malicious; proceeding from a depraved heart.

Vain shows of love to vail his felon hate. Pope.

2. In law, proceeding from an evil heart or purpose; done with the deliberate purpose to commit a crime; as, felonious homicide.

FE-LŌ'NI-OUS-LY, adv. In a felonious manner; with the deliberate intention to commit a crime. Indictments for capital offenses must state the fact to be done feloniously.

FEL'ON-OUS, a. Wicked; felonious. Spenser.

FEL'ON-WŌRT, n. A plant of the genus Solanum. Fam. of Plants.

FEL'ON-Y, n. [See FELON.] In common law, any crime which incurs the forfeiture of lands or goods. Treason was formerly comprised under the name of felony, but is now distinguished from crimes thus denominated, although it is really a felony. All offenses punishable with death are felonies; and so are some crimes not thus punished, as suicide, homicide by chance-medley, or in self-defense, and petty larceny. Capital punishment, therefore, does not necessarily enter into the true idea or definition of felony; the true criterion of felony being forfeiture of lands or goods. But the idea of felony has been so generally connected with that of capital punishment, that law and usage now confirm that connection. Thus, if a statute makes any new offense a felony, it is understood to mean a crime punishable with death. Blackstone.

FEL'SITE, n. [See FELDSPAR.] A species of compact feldspar, of an azure-blue or green color, found amorphous, associated with quartz and mica.

FEL'SPAR, n. See FELDSPAR. [Kirwan.

FER-MENT'AL, a. Having power to cause fermentation. Brown.

FER-MENT-A'TION, n. [L. fermentatio.]

The sensible internal motion of the constituent particles of animal and vegetable substances, occasioned by a certain degree of heat and moisture, and accompanied by an extrication of gas and heat. Fermentation is followed by a change of properties in the substances fermented, arising from new combinations of their principles. It may be defined, in its most general sense, any spontaneous change which takes place in animal or vegetable substances after life has ceased. It is of three principal kinds; vinous, acetous, and putrefactive. The term is also applied to other processes, as the panary fermentation, or the raising of bread; but it is limited by some authors to the vinous and acetous fermentations, which terminate in the production of alcohol or vinegar. Fermentation differs from effervescence. The former is confined to animal and vegetable substances; the latter is applicable to mineral substances. The former is spontaneous; the latter produced by the mixture of bodies. Encyc. Parr. Thomson.

FER-MENT'A-TIVE, a. Causing, or having power to cause, fermentation; as, fermentative heat.

FEUD, (fūde,) n. [Sax fiehth, or fægth, from figan, feon, to hate. Hence also fah, a foe, and from the participle feond, a fiend; D. vyand, G. feind, an enemy; G. fehd, war, quarrel; Sw. fegd; Dan. fejde. In Irish, fuath is hatred, abhorrence. Class Bg.]
1. Primarily, a deadly quarrel; hatred and contention that were to be terminated only by death. Among our rude ancestors, these quarrels, though originating in the murder of an individual, involved the whole tribe or family of the injured and of the aggressing parties. Hence, in modern usage,
2. A contention or quarrel; particularly, an inveterate quarrel between families or parties in a state; the discord and animosities which prevail among the citizens of a state or city, sometimes accompanied with civil war. In the north of Great Britain, the word is still used in its original sense; denoting a combination of kindred to revenge the death of any of their blood, on the offender and all his race, or any other great enemy. We say, it is the policy of our enemies to raise and cherish intestine feuds.
The word is not strictly applicable to wars between different nations, but to intestine wars, and to quarrels and animosities between families or small tribes.
FEUD, n. Usually supposed to be composed of the Teutonic fee, goods, reward, and ead or odh, W. eiaw, possession, property. But if feuds had been given as rewards for services, that consideration would have vested the title to the land in the donee. Yet feud is not a Teutonic or Gothic word, being found among none of the northern nations of Europe. This word originated in the south of Europe, whether in France, Spain, or Italy, may perhaps be ascertained by writings of the middle ages, which I do not possess. It probably originated among the Franks, or in Lombardy or Italy, and certainly among men who studied the civil law. In Italian, a feoffee is called fede-commessario, a trust-commissary; fede-commesso is a feoffment, a trust-estate; Sp. fideicomiso, a feoffment. These words are the fidei-commissarius, fiaei-commissum, of the Digest and Codex. In Spanish, fiado signifies security given for another, or bail; al fiado, on trust; fiador, one who trusts; feudo, a fief, fee, or feud; Port. id. In Norman, fidz de chevalers signifies knight's fees. Feud, then, with fee, which is a contraction of it, is a word formed from the L. fides, It. fede, Sp. fe, Norm. fei, faith, trust, with had, state, or ead or odh, estate; and a feud is an estate in trust, or on condition, which coincides nearly in sense with the northern word, G. lehen, D. leen; Sw. lân, Dan. lehn, Eng. loan. From the origin of this word, we see the peculiar propriety of calling the donee fidelis, and his obligation to his lord fidelitas, whence fealty.]
A fief; a fee; a right to lands or hereditaments held in trust, or on the terms of performing certain conditions; the right which a vassal or tenant has to the lands or other immovable thing of his lord, to use the same and take the profits thereof hereditarily, rendering to his superior such duties and services as belong to military tenure, &c., the property of the soil always remaining in the lord or superior.
From the foregoing explanation of the origin of the word, result very naturally the definition of the term, and the doctrine of forfeiture, upon non-performance of the conditions of the trust or loan.
FEUD'AL, (fūd'al,) a. [Sp. feudal.]
1. Pertaining to feuds, fiefs, or fees; as, feudal rights or services; feudal tenures.

Fine arts, or polite arts, are the arts which depend chiefly on the labors of the mind or imagination, and whose object is pleasure; as poetry, music, painting, and sculpture.

The uses of this word are so numerous and indefinite, as to preclude a particular definition of each. In general, fine, in popular language, expresses whatever is excellent, showy, or magnificent.

FINE, n. [This word is the basis of finance, but I have not found it, in its simple form, in any modern language, except the English. Junius says that fin, in Cimbric, is a mulct, and finio, to fine. The word seems to be the L. finis, and the application of it to pecuniary compensation seems to have proceeded from its feudal use, in the transfer of lands, in which a final agreement or concord was made between the lord and his vassal. See פנה fanah. Class Bn, No. 23.]

1. In a feudal sense, a final agreement between persons concerning lands or rents, or between the lord and his vassal, prescribing the conditions on which the latter should hold his lands. Spelman.

2. A sum of money paid to the lord by his tenant, for permission to alienate or transfer his lands to another. This, in England, was exacted only from the king's tenants in capite. Blackstone.

3. A sum of money paid by way of penalty for an offense; a mulct; a pecuniary punishment. Fines are usually prescribed by statute, for the several violations of law; or the limit is prescribed, beyond which the judge cannot impose a fine for a particular offense.

In fine. [Fr. enfin; L. in and finis.] In the end or conclusion; to conclude; to sum up all.

FINE, v. t. [See FINE, the adjective.] To clarify; to refine; to purify; to defecate; to free from feculence or foreign matter; as, to fine wine.

[This is the most general use of this word.]

2. To purify, as a metal; as, to fine gold or silver. In this sense, we now generally use refine; but fine is proper. Job xxviii. Prov. xvii.

FIRE, n. [Sax. fyr; G. feuer; D. vuur; Dan. and Sw. fyr; Gr. πυρ. Qu. Coptic, pira, the sun; New Guinea, for. The radical sense of fire is usually, to rush, to rage, to be violently agitated; and if this is the sense of fire, it coincides with L. furo. It may be from shining or consuming. See Class Br, No. 2, 6, 9, 30.]

1. Heat and light emanating visibly, perceptibly, and simultaneously, from any body; caloric; the unknown cause of the sensation of heat, and of the retrocession of the homogeneous particles of bodies from one another, producing expansion, and thus enlarging all their dimensions; one of the causes of magnetism, as evinced by Dr. Hare's calorimotor. Silliman.

In the popular acceptation of the word, fire is the effect of combustion. The combustible body ignited, or heated to redness, we call fire; and when ascending in a stream or body, we call it flame. A piece of charcoal, in combustion, is of a red color, and very hot. In this state it is said to be on fire, or to contain fire. When combustion ceases, it loses its redness and extreme heat, and we say, the fire is extinct.

[This word is rarely used, except in poetry. In prose we use CONFIRM.]

FIRM'A-MENT, (furm'a-ment,) n. [L. firmamentum, from firmus, firmo.]

The region of the air; the sky or heavens. In Scripture, the word denotes an expanse, a wide extent; for such is the signification of the Hebrew word, coinciding with regio, region, and reach. The original, therefore, does not convey the sense of solidity, but of stretching, extension; the great arch or expanse over our heads, in which are placed the atmosphere and the clouds, and in which the stars appear to be placed, and are really seen.

And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters. — Gen. i. 6.

And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament. — Gen. i. 14.

1. An animal that lives in water. Fish is a general name for a class of animals subsisting in water, which were distributed by Linnæus into six orders. They breathe by means of gills, swim by the aid of their tail and caudal fins, and are oviparous. Some of them have the skeleton bony, and others cartilaginous. Most of the former have the opening of the gills closed by a peculiar covering, called the gill-lid; many of the latter have no gill-lid, and are hence said to breathe through apertures. Cetaceous animals, as the whale and dolphin, are, in popular language, called fishes, and have been so classed by some naturalists; but they breathe by lungs, and are viviparous, like quadrupeds. The term fish has been also extended to other aquatic animals, such as shell-fish, lobsters, &c. We use fish, in the singular, for fishes in general, or the whole race.

2. The flesh of fish, used as food. But we usually apply flesh to land animals.

FIT, a. [Flemish, vitten; G. pass, fit, and a pace; passen, to be fit, suitable, right. This is from the root of Eng. pass; D. pas, time, season; van pas, fitting, fit, convenient; Eng. pat; Dan. passer, to be fit. In L. competo, whence compatible, signifies, properly, to meet or to fall on; hence, to suit, or be fit, from peto. This is probably the same word. The primary sense is, to come to, to fall on; hence, to meet, to extend to, to be close, to suit. To come, or fall, is the primary sense of time or season, as in the Dutch. See Class Bd, No. 45, 64, and Class Bz, No. 52, 53, 70.]

FLAT'WISE, a. or adv. [from flat.] With the flat side downward, or next to another object; not edgewise. Woodward.

FLAUNT, v. i. [I know not whence we have this word. It is doubtless of Celtic origin, from the root Ln, bearing the sense of throwing out, or spreading. Qu. Scot. flanter, to waver. See FLOUNCE.]
1. To throw or spread out; to flutter; to display ostentatiously; as, a flaunting show.
You flaunt about the streets in your new gilt chariot. Arbuthnot.
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade. Pope.
[This correctly expresses the author's meaning, which is, that the proud often attempt to make a show and parade of their importance, even in poverty. Johnson's remark on the use of the word seems, therefore, to be unfounded.]
2. To carry a pert or saucy appearance. Boyle.

FLAUNT, n. Any thing displayed for show. Shak.

FLAUNT'ING, ppr. or a. Making an ostentatious display.

FLAUNT'ING-LY, adv. In a flaunting way.

To flee the question, or from the question, in legislation, is said of a legislator who, when a question is to be put to the house, leaves his seat, to avoid the dilemma of voting against his conscience, or giving an unpopular vote. In the phrases in which this verb appears to be transitive, there is really an ellipsis.

FLEECE, n. [Sax. fleos, flys, flese; D. vlies; G. fliess; most probably from shearing or stripping, as in Dutch the word signifies a film or membrane, as well as a fleece. The verb to fleece seems to favor the sense of stripping. See Class Ls, No. 25, 28, 30. But Qu. L. vellus, from vello, to pluck or tear off. Varro. See Class Bl. In Russ., volos is hair or wool, written, also, vlas. It was probably the practice to pluck off wool, before it was the practice to shear it.]

The coat of wool shorn from a sheep at one time.

FLEECE, v. t. To shear off a covering or growth of wool.

2. To strip of money or property; to take from, by severe exactions, under color of law or justice, or pretext of necessity, or by virtue of authority. Arbitrary princes fleece their subjects; and clients complain that they are sometimes fleeced by their lawyers.

This word is rarely or never used for plundering in war by a licentious soldiery, but is properly used to express a stripping by contributions levied on a conquered people.

FLU-O-BŌ'RATE, n. A compound of fluoboric acid with a base.

FLU-O-BŌ'RIC, a. The fluoboric acid or gas is a compound of fluorine and boron; also called fluorid of boron. Davy.

FLŪ'OR, n. [Low L., from fluo, to flow.]

1. A fluid state. Newton.

2. Menstrual flux. [Little used in either sense.]

3. In mineralogy, fluorid of calcium, usually called fluor-spar. It commonly occurs massive, but crystallizes in octahedrons, which are frequently changed into cubes. It is a mineral of beautiful colors, and much used for ornamental vessels. This is the material of which the original myrrhine vessels of the ancients were made. Dana.

FLU-OR'IC, a. Pertaining to fluor; obtained from fluor.

FLŪ'OR-ID, n. A compound of fluorine with a metallic or combustible base.

FLŪ'OR-INE, n. An element in the form of a yellowish-brown gas, with the odor of chlorine and burnt sugar; one of the acidifying and basifying principles.

FLU-O-SIL'I-CATE, n. [fluor and silex or silica.]

In chemistry, a compound of fluosilicic acid with some base.

FLU-O-SI-LIC'IC AC'ID, n. An acid composed of silicon and fluorine; also called fluorid of silicon.

FLUR'RI-ED, (flur'rid,) pp. Put in agitation.

FLUR'RY, n. A sudden blast or gust, or a light, temporary breeze; as, a flurry of wind. It is never, with us, applied to a storm of duration.

FOR, prep. [Sax. for or fore; D. voor, for, and before; G. für and vor; Sw. för; Dan. for, för; Ir. far; Fr. pour; Sp. and Port. por, para; It. per, which unites for and L. per, and, if this is the same word, so is the Fr. par. Indeed, for seems to be radically the same word; for the Germans and Dutch use ver, far, in composition, in the same manner, and in the same words, as the English, Danes, and Swedes, use for. Thus Ger. verbieten, D. verbieden, Dan. forbyder, Sw. förbiuda, are all the same word, Eng. to forbid. The French use par as we use for, in pardonner, to pardon, to forgive, It. perdonare. Arm. par and pour, ⏑ – in composition; Hindoo, para; Pers. بر bar or ber, – ⏑

and بهر behr. For corresponds in sense with the L. pro, as fore does with præ; but pro and præ are probably contracted from prod, præd. The L. por, in composition, as in porrigo, is probably contracted from porro, Gr. ποῤῥω, which is the Eng. far. The Gr. παρα, and probably περα, περαν, are from the same root. The radical sense of for is, to go, to pass, to advance, to reach or stretch; and it is probably allied to the Sax. faran, to fare, W. for, a pass, foriaw, to travel, Class Br, No. 23, 37, 41. To go toward, to meet, or turn to, is the primary sense of for, in two of its most common uses; one implying opposition, against; the other, a favor or benefit; or for may be from fore, hence opposite. To sell or exchange a hat for a guinea, is to set or pass one against the other; this is the primary sense of all prepositions which are placed before equivalents in sale and barter. Benefit or favor is expressed by moving toward a person, or by advancing him. This present is for my friend; this advice for his instruction. And in the Old Testament, the face or front is taken for favor. For, in some phrases, signifies during, that is, passing, continuing in time. I will lend a book for a day or a month. In composition, for is used to give a negative sense, as in forbid, which is forebid, to command before, that is, against; and in forgive, to give back or away, to remit, to send back or to send away.]

1. Against; in the place of; as a substitute or equivalent, noting equal value, or satisfactory compensation, either in barter and sale, in contract, or in punishment. "And Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses, and for flocks, and for the cattle of the herds;" that is, according to the original, he gave them bread against horses, like the Gr. αντι, and Fr. contre. Gen. xlvii. 17.

Buy us and our land for bread.—Gen. xlvii. 19.
And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.—Exod. xxi.
As the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.—Matt. xx. See also Mark viii. 37. Matt. xvi. 26.

2. In the place of; instead of; noting substitution of persons, or agency of one in the place of another, with equivalent authority. An attorney is empowered to act for his principal. Will you take a letter, and deliver it for me at the post-office? that is, in my place, or for my benefit.

3. In exchange of; noting one thing taken or given in place of another; as, to quit the profession of law for that of a clergyman.

4. In the place of; instead of; as, to translate a poem line for line.

5. In the character of; noting resemblance; a sense derived from substitution, or standing in the place of, like αντιθεος, in Greek.

If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.
But let her go for an ungrateful woman. Philips.
I hear for certain, and do speak the truth. Shak.
He quivered with his feet, and lay for dead. Dryden.

6. Toward; with the intention of going to.

We sailed from Peru for China and Japan. Bacon.
We sailed directly for Genoa, and had a fair wind. Addison.

So we say, a ship is bound for or to France.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of; on account of; that is, toward, noting use, benefit, or purpose.

An ant is a wise creature for itself. Bacon.
Shall I think the world was made for one,
And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,
Not for protection, but to be devoured? Dryden.

8. Conducive to; beneficial to; in favor of.

It is for the general good of human society, and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just; and it is for men's health to be temperate. Tillotson.

9. Leading or inducing to, as a motive.

There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice. Tillotson.

10. Noting arrival, meeting, coming, or possession. Wait patiently for an expected good. So in the phrases looking for, staying for.

11. Toward the obtaining of; in order to the arrival at or possession of. After all our exertions, we depend on divine aid for success.

12. Against; in opposition to; with a tendency to resist and destroy; as, a remedy for the headache or toothache. Alkalies are good for the heartburn. So we say, to provide clothes or stores for winter, or against winter.

13. Against or on account of; in prevention of.

She wrapped him close for catching cold. Richardson.
And, for the time shall not seem tedious. Shak.

This use is nearly obsolete. The sense, however, is derived from meeting, opposing, as in No. 12.

14. Because; on account of; by reason of. He cried out for anguish. I can not go for want of time. For this cause, I can not believe the report.

That which we, for our unworthiness, are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God, for the worthiness of his Son, would, notwithstanding, vouchsafe to grant. Hooker.
Edward and Richard,
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs. Shak.
How to choose dogs for scent or speed. Waller.
For as much as it is a fundamental law. Bacon.

15. With respect or regard to; on the part of.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters. Bacon.
Thus much for the beginning and progress of the deluge. Burnet.

So we say, for me, for myself, or as for me, I have no anxiety, but for you I have apprehensions; all implying toward or on the side of.

16. Through a certain space; during a certain time; as, to travel for three days; to sail for seven weeks; he holds his office for life; he traveled on sand for ten miles together. These senses seem to imply passing, the proper sense of for.

17. In quest of; in order to obtain; as, to search for arguments; to recur to antiquity for examples. See No. 11.

18. According to; as far as.

Chemists have not been able, for aught is vulgarly known, by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony. Boyle.

19. Noting meeting, coming together, or reception. I am ready for you; that is, I am ready to meet or receive you

Digitized by Google

20. Toward; of tendency to; as, an inclination for drink.

21. In favor of; on the part or side of; that is, toward or inclined to. One is for a free government; another is for a limited monarchy.

Aristotle is for poetical justice. Dennis.

22. With a view to obtain; in order to possess. He writes for money, or for fame; that is, toward meeting, or to have in return, as a reward.

23. Toward; with tendency to, or in favor of. It is for his honor to retire from office. It is for our quiet to have few intimate connections.

24. Notwithstanding; against; in opposition to. The fact may be so, for any thing that has yet appeared. The task is great, but for all that, I shall not be deterred from undertaking it. This is a different application of the sense of No. 1, 2, 3, 4. [Hoc non obstante.]

The writer will do what she pleases for all me. Spect. No. 79.

25. For the use of; to be used in; that is, toward, noting advantage.

The oak for nothing ill,
The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill. Spenser.

26. In recompense of; in return of.

Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the public wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Cesar's health. Dryden.

[See No. 1.]

27. In proportion to; or rather, looking toward, regarding. He is tall for one of his years, or tall for [his age.

28. By means of.

Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will. Hale.

29. By the want of.

The inhabitants suffered severely both for provisions and fuel. Marshall.

30. For my life or heart, though my life were to be given in exchange, or as the price of purchase. I can not, for my life, understand the man. [No. 1.]

31. For to, denoting purpose. For was anciently placed before the infinitives of verbs, and the use is correct, but now obsolete, except in vulgar language. I came for to see you; pour vous voir.

FOR, con. The word by which a reason is introduced of something before advanced. "That ye may be the children of your Father who is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good." In such sentences, for has the sense of because, by reason that, as in No. 14; with this difference, that in No. 14, the word precedes a single noun, and here it precedes a sentence or clause; but the phrase seems to be elliptical — for this cause or reason, which follows, he maketh his sun to rise, &c. In Romans xiii. 6, we find the word in both its applications — "For, for this cause ye pay tribute also;" the first for referring to the sentence following; the latter to the noun cause.

2. Because; on this account that; properly, for that.

For as much, compounded, forasmuch, is equivalent to, in regard to that, in consideration of. Forasmuch as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged in a little drink.

For why, Fr., pour quoi, [per quod, pro quo,] because; for this reason.

FOR, as a prefix to verbs, has usually the force of a negative or primitive, denoting against, that is, before, or away, aside.

FOR'AGE, n. [Fr. fourrage; Arm. fouraich; It. foraggio; Sp. forrage; Port. forragem; D. voeraadge. If this word signifies primarily food or fodder, it is connected with W. pori, to feed, and L. voro. But I take it to be from the root of Sax. faran, to go, and primarily to signify that which is collected in wandering, roving, excursion. In Port. foragido is a vagabond, and forrejar is to waste, to ravage.]

1. Food of any kind for horses and cattle, as grass, pasture, hay, corn, and oats.

2. The act of providing forage.

Col. Mawhood completed his forage unmolested. Marshall.
If the forage is to be made at a distance from the camp. Encyc.

FŌRE-SPUR'RER, n. One that rides before. [Not used.] Shak.

FOR'EST, n. [It. foresta; Fr. forêt; Arm. forest; G. forst; Ir. foraois, foraighis; Norm. forcs; from the same root as L. foris, Fr. hors, and the Sax. farun, to go, to depart. Hence, the It. forestiere, Sp. forastero, signifies strange, foreign; It. foresto, wild, savage; Port. forasteiro, a stranger. This enables us to understand the radical meaning of other words which signify strange, wild, barbarous, &c. They all express distance from cities and civilization, and are from roots expressing departure or wandering.]

2. An extensive wood, or a large tract of land covered with trees. In America, the word is usually applied to a wood of native growth, or a tract of wood-

FOR'FEIT, (for'fit,) v. t. [Fr. forfaire, forfait; Low L. forisfacere, from L. foris, out or abroad, and facio, to make; Norm. forface, forfeit, and forfist, forfeited.]

To lose or render confiscable, by some fault, offense, or crime; to lose the right to some species of property, or that which belongs to one; to alienate the right to possess by some neglect or crime; as, to forfeit an estate by a breach of the condition of tenure, or by treason. By the ancient laws of England, a man forfeited his estate by neglecting or refusing to fulfill the conditions on which it was granted to him, or by a breach of fealty. A man now forfeits his estate by committing treason. A man forfeits his honor or reputation by a breach of promise, and by any criminal or disgraceful act. Statutes declare that by certain acts a man shall forfeit a certain sum of money. Under the feudal system, the right to the land forfeited vested in the lord or superior. In modern times, the right to things forfeited is generally regulated by statutes; it is vested in the state, in corporations, or in prosecutors or informers, or partly in the state or a corporation and partly in an individual. The duelist, to secure the reputation of bravery, forfeits the esteem of good men and the favor of Heaven.

FOR'FEIT, (for'fit,) n. [Fr. forfait; W. forfed; Low L. forisfactura. Originally, and still in French, a trespass, transgression, or crime. But with us, the effect of some transgression or offense.]

1. That which is forfeited or lost, or the right to which is alienated by a crime, offense, neglect of duty, or breach of contract; hence, a fine; a mulct; a penalty. He that murders pays the forfeit of his life. When a statute creates a penalty for a transgression, either in money or in corporal punishment, the offender, who, on conviction, pays the money or suffers the punishment, pays the forfeit.

2. Something deposited and redeemable by a jocular fine; whence the game of forfeits. Goldsmith. Smart.

3. One whose life is forfeited. [Not used.] Shak.

FOR'FEIT, part. a. [Used for FORFEITED.] Lost or alienated for an offense or crime; liable to penal seizure.

And his long toils were forfeit for a look. Dryden.

FOR'FEIT-A-BLE, (for'fit-a-bl,) a. Liable to be forfeited; subject to forfeiture.

For the future, uses shall be subject to the statutes of mortmain, and forfeitable like the lands themselves. Blackstone.

FOR'FEIT-ED, pp. or a. Lost or alienated by an offense, crime, or breach of condition.

FOR'FEIT-ER, n. One who incurs punishment by forfeiting his bond. Shak.

FOR'FEIT-ING, ppr. Alienating or losing, as a right, by an offense, crime, or breach of condition.

FOR'FEIT-URE, (for'fit-yūre,) n. The act of forfeiting; the losing of some right, privilege, estate, honor, office, or effects, by an offense, crime, breach of condition, or other act. In regard to property, forfeiture is a loss of the right to possess, but not generally the actual possession, which is to be transferred by some subsequent process. In the feudal system, a forfeiture of lands gave him in reversion or remainder a right to enter.

2. That which is forfeited; an estate forfeited; a fine or mulct. The prince enriched his treasury by fines and forfeitures.

FOR-GAVE', pret. of FORGIVE, which see.

FŌRGE, n. [Fr. forge; Sp. Port. forja; probably from L. ferrum, iron; It. ferriera, a forge; Port. ferragem, iron-work.]

1. A furnace in which iron or other metal is heated and hammered into form. A larger forge is called with us iron-works. Smaller forges, consisting of a bellows so placed as to cast a stream of air upon ignited coals, are of various forms and uses. Armies have traveling forges for repairing gun-carriages, &c.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped. Hooker.

3. The act of beating or working iron or steel; the manufacture of metalline bodies.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy. Bacon.

FŌRGE, v. t. To form by heating and hammering; to beat into any particular shape, as a metal.

2. To make by any means.

Names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of scholars. Locke.

3. To make falsely; to falsify; to counterfeit; to make in the likeness of something else; as, to forge coin; to forge a bill of exchange, or a receipt.

FŌRGED, (fōrjd,) pp. or a. Hammered; beaten into shape; made; counterfeited.

FŌRG'ER, n. One that makes or forms.

2. One who counterfeits; a falsifier.

FŌRG'ER-Y, n. The act of forging or working metal into shape. [In this sense, rarely or never now used.]

2. The act of falsifying; the crime of counterfeiting; as, the forgery of coin, or of bank notes, or of a bond. Forgery may consist in counterfeiting a writing, or in setting a false name to it, to the prejudice of another person.

3. That which is forged or counterfeited. Certain letters, purporting to be written by General Washington, during the revolution, were forgeries.

FOR-GET', v. t.; pret. FORGOT, [FORGAT, obs.;] pp. FORGOT, FORGOTTEN. [Sax. forgetan, forgitan, forgytan; G. vergessen; D. vergeeten; Sw. förgäta; Dan. forgietter; for and get.]

1. To lose the remembrance of; to let go from the memory.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits. — Ps. ciii.

2. To slight; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. — Is. xlix.

FOR-GET'FUL, a. Apt to forget; easily losing the remembrance of. A forgetful man should use helps to strengthen his memory.

2. Heedless; careless; neglectful; inattentive.

FOR-GIV'A-BLE, a. [See FORGIVE.] That may be pardoned. Sherwood.

FOR-GIVE', (for-giv',) v. t.; pret. FORGAVE; pp FORGIVEN. [for and give; Sax. forgifan; Goth. fragiban; G. vergeben; D. vergeeven; Dan. forgiver; Sw. tilgifva. The sense is, to give from, that is, away, as we see by the Gothic fra, from. The English for, and G. and D. ver, are the same word, or from the same root; ver is the Eng. far. The Swedish til signifies to, and in this compound it signifies toward or back; so in L. remitto. See GIVE.]

1. To pardon; to remit, as an offense or debt; to overlook an offense, and treat the offender as not guilty. The original and proper phrase is to forgive the offense, to send it away, to reject it, that is, not to impute it, [put it to,] the offender. But, by an easy transition, we also use the phrase, to forgive the person offending.

Forgive us our debts. Lord's Prayer.
If ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. — Matt. vi.
As savages never forget a favor, so they never forgive an injury. N. Chipman.

It is to be noted that pardon, like forgive, may be followed by the name or person, and by the offense; but remit can be followed by the offense only. We forgive or pardon the man, but we do not remit him.

2. To remit, as a debt, fine, or penalty.

FOR-GIV'EN, pp. Pardoned; remitted.

FOR-GIVE'NESS, (for-giv'ness,) n. The act of forgiving; the pardon of an offender, by which he is considered and treated as not guilty. The forgiveness of enemies is a Christian duty.

FORM, n. [L. forma: Fr. forme; Sp. forma, horma; It. forma; Ir. foirm; D. vorm; G. form; Sw. and Dan. form. The root of this word is not certainly known. The primary sense is probably to set, to fix, to fit. The D. vormen is rendered, to form, to shape, to mold, to confirm; and form may be allied to firm.]

1. The shape or external appearance of a body; the figure, as defined by lines and angles; that manner of being peculiar to each body, which exhibits it to the eye as distinct from every other body. Thus we speak of the form of a circle, the form of a square or triangle, a circular form, the form of the head, or of the human body, a handsome form, an ugly form, a frightful form.

Matter is the basis or substratum of bodies; form is the particular disposition of matter in each body, which distinguishes its appearance from that of every other body.

The form of his visage was changed. — Dan. iii.
After that he appeared in another form to two of them, as they walked. — Mark xvi.

FOWL, n. [Sax. fugel, fugl; G. and D. vogel; Dan. fugl; Sw. fogel: from the root of the L. fugio, fugo, Gr. φευγω, and signifying the flying animal.]

A flying or winged animal; the generic name of certain animals that move through the air by the aid of wings. Fowls have two feet, are covered with feathers, and have wings for flight. Bird is, etymologically, a young fowl or chicken, and may well be applied to the smaller species of fowls. But it has usurped the place of fowl, and is now commonly used as the generic term, though this is not in accordance with its etymology.

Fowl is used as a collective noun. We dined on fish and fowl.

Let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air.—Gen. i.

But this use in America is not frequent. We generally use the plural, fowls. The word is colloquially used for poultry, or rather, in a more limited sense, for barndoor fowls.

FOWL, v. i. To catch or kill wild fowls for game or food, as by means of bird-lime, decoys, nets, and snares, or by pursuing them with hawks, or by shooting.

FOWL'ER, n. A sportsman who pursues wild fowls, or takes or kills them for food.

FOWL'ING, ppr. Pursuing or taking wild fowls.

FOWL'ING, n. The art or practice of catching or shooting fowls or birds; also, falconry.

FROL'IC-SŌME-NESS, n. Gayety; wild pranks.

FROM, prep. [Sax. fram, from; Goth. fram. In Swedish, it signifies before or forward, but its sense is, past or gone, for främling is a stranger, and främga is, to go out, to depart. Dan. frem, whence fremmer, to forward, to promote, fremmed, strange, fremkommer, to come forth or out; G. fremd, strange, foreign; D. vreemd, id. If m is radical, this word is probably from the root of roam, ramble, primarily to pass, to go.]

The sense of from may be expressed by the noun distance, or by the adjective distant, or by the participles, departing, removing to a distance. Thus, it is one hundred miles from Boston to Hartford. He took his sword from his side. Light proceeds from the sun. Water issues from the earth in springs. Separate the coarse wool from the fine. Men have all sprung from Adam. Men often go from good to bad, and from bad to worse. The merit of an action depends on the principle from which it proceeds. Men judge of facts from personal knowledge, or from testimony. We should aim to judge from undeniable premises.

The sense of from is literal or figurative; but it is uniformly the same.

In certain phrases, generally or always elliptical, from is followed by certain adverbs, denoting place, region, or position, indefinitely, no precise point being expressed; as,

From above; from the upper regions.
From afar; from a distance.
From beneath; from a place or region below
From below; from a lower place.
From behind; from a place or position in the rear.
From far; from a distant place.
From high; from on high; from a high place, from an upper region, or from heaven.
From hence; from this place. But from is superfluous before hence; the phrase, however, is common.
From thence; from that place; from being superfluous.
From whence; from which place; from being superfluous.
From where; from which place.
From within; from the interior or inside.
From without; from the outside; from abroad.

From precedes another preposition, followed by its proper object or case.

From amidst; as, from amidst the waves.
From among: as, from among the trees.
From beneath; as, from beneath my head.
From beyond; as, from beyond the river.
From forth; as, from forth his bridal bower.

But this is an inverted order of the words; forth from his bower.

From off; as, from off the mercy-seat, that is, from the top or surface.
From out; as, from out a window, that is, through an opening, or from the inside.
From out of, is an ill combination of words, and not to be used.
From under; as, from under the bed, from under the ashes, that is, from beneath or the lower side.
From within; as, from within the house, that is, from the inner part or interior.

G.

G, the seventh letter, and the fifth articulation, of the English alphabet, is derived to us, through the Latin and Greek, from the Assyrian languages; it being found in the Chaldee, Syriac, Hebrew, Samaritan, Phenician, Ethiopic, and Arabic. In the latter language, it is called gim or jim: but in the others, gimel, gomal, or gamal, that is, camel, from its shape, which resembles the neck of that animal, at least in the Chaldee and Hebrew. It is the third letter in the Chaldee, Syriac, Hebrew, Samaritan, and Greek; the fifth in the Arabic, and the twentieth in the Ethiopic. The Greek Γ, gamma, is the Chaldaic ג inverted. The early Latins used C for the Greek gamma, and hence C came to hold the third place in the order of the alphabet; the place which gimel holds in the Oriental languages. The two letters are primarily palatals, and so nearly allied in sound that they are easily convertible; and they have been reciprocally used, the one for the other. But in the Assyrian languages, gimel had two sounds; one close, as we pronounce the letter in gave, good; the other compound, as the English j, or as ch in chase. In the Arabic, this letter has the sound of the English j or dzh, and this sound it has in many English words, as in genius, gem, ginger. It retains its close sound in all cases before a, o, and u; but before e, i, and y, its sound is close or compound, as custom has dictated, and its different sounds are not reducible to rules. It is silent in some words before n, as in benign, condign, malign, campaign; but it resumes its sound in benignity and malignity. G is mute before n in gnash, gnaw; it is silent also in many words when united with h, as in bright, might, night, nigh, high. The Saxon g has in many words been softened or liquefied into y or ow; as Sax. dæg, gear, Eng. day, year; Sax. bugan, Eng. to bow.

The Celtic nations had a peculiar manner of beginning the sound of u or w with the articulation g, or rather prefixing this articulation to that vowel. Thus, guard for ward, gwain for wain, guerre for war, gwell for well. Whether this g has been added by the Celtic races, or whether the Teutonic nations have lost it, is a question I have not examined with particular attention.

As a numeral, G was anciently used to denote 400, and with a dash over it, Ḡ, 40,000. As an abbreviation, it stands for Gaius, Gellius, &c. In music, it is the mark of the treble clef; and, from its being placed at the head, or marking the first sound in Guido's scale, the whole scale took the name Gamut, from the Greek name of the letter.

GA, in Gothic, is a prefix, answering to ge in Saxon and other Teutonic languages. It sometimes has the force of the Latin cum or con, as in gawithan, to conjoin. But in most words it appears to have no use, and in modern English it is entirely lost. Y-cleped, in which ge is changed into y, is the last word in which the English retained this prefix.

GAB, n. [Scot. gab, Dan. gab, the mouth, and a gap or gaping; Sw. gap; Russ. guba, a lip, a bay or gulf, the mouth of a river; Ir. cab, the mouth; connected probably with gabble, gibberish, Sax. gabban, to mock, perhaps to make mouths. See GABBLE and GAPE.]

GAL'BA-NUM, } n. [Heb. חלבנה, and in Ch. and Syr.
GAL'BAN, } varied in orthography, from חלב, to milk.]

The inspissated sap of Galbanum officinale, an umbelliferous plant. It comes in pale-colored, semi-transparent, soft, tenacious masses, of different shades, from white to brown. It has a strong, unpleasant smell, with a bitterish, warm taste. It is unctuous to the touch, and softens between the fingers. When distilled with water or spirit, it yields an essential oil; and, by distillation in a retort without mixture, it yields an empyreumatic oil of a fine blue color; but this is changed, in the air, to a purple. Parr.

GĀLE, n. [In Dan., gal is furious, and kuler is to blow strong, kuling, a gentle gale, from the root of coal and cold. In Ir., gal is a puff, a blast, and steam. The sense is obvious.]

A current of air; a strong wind. The sense of this word is very indefinite. The poets use it in the sense of a moderate breeze or current of air; as, a gentle gale. A stronger wind is called a fresh gale.

In the language of seamen, the word gale, unaccompanied by an epithet, signifies a vehement wind, a storm, or tempest. They say, the ship carried away her topmast in a gale, or gale of wind; the ship rode out the gale. But the word is often qualified; as, a hard or strong gale, a violent gale. A current of wind, somewhat less violent, is denominated a stiff gale. A less vehement wind is called a fresh gale, which is a wind not too strong for a ship to carry single-reefed top-sails, when close-hauled. When the wind is not so violent but that a ship will carry her top-sails a-trip, or full spread, it is called a loom-gale. Mar. Dict. Encyc.

GĀLE, n. A plant growing in bogs. Smart.

GEN'E-RA. See GENUS.

GEN'ER-A-BLE, a. That may be engendered, begotten, or produced. Bentley.

GEN'ER-AL, a. [Fr., from L. generalis, from genus, a kind.]

1. Properly, relating to a whole genus or kind; and hence, relating to a whole class or order. Thus we speak of a general law of the animal or vegetable economy. This word, though from genus, kind, is used to express whatever is common to an order, class, kind, sort, or species, or to any company or association of individuals.
2. Comprehending many species or individuals; not special or particular; as, it is not logical to draw a general inference or conclusion from a particular fact.
3. Lax in signification; not restrained or limited to a particular import; not specific; as, a loose and general expression.
4. Public; common; relating to or comprehending the whole community; as, the general interest or safety of a nation.

To all general purposes, we have uniformly been one people. Federalist, Jr.

5. Common to many or the greatest number; as, a general opinion; a general custom.
6. Not directed to a single object.

If the same thing be peculiarly evil, that general aversion will be turned into a particular hatred against it. Spratt.

7. Having a relation to all; common to the whole. Adam, our general sire. Milton.
8. In law, to plead the general issue, is to deny at once the whole indictment or declaration, without offering any special matter to evade it. Bouvier.
9. Extensive, though not universal; common; usual.

This word is prefixed or annexed to words to express the extent of their application. Thus a general assembly is an assembly of a whole body, in fact or by representation. In Scotland, it is the whole church convened by its representatives. In America, a legislature is sometimes called a general assembly or general court.

In logic, a general term is a term which is the sign of a general idea.

An attorney-general, and a solicitor-general, is an officer who conducts suits and prosecutions for the king, or for a nation or state, and whose authority is general in the state or kingdom.

A vicar-general has authority as vicar or substitute over a whole territory or jurisdiction.

An adjutant-general assists the general of an army, distributes orders, receive returns, &c.

The word general, thus annexed to a name of office, denotes chief or superior; as, a commissary-general, quartermaster-general.

In the line, a general officer is one who commands an army, a division, or a brigade.

GEN'ER-AL, n. The whole; the total; that which comprehends all or the chief part; opposed to particular.

In particulars our knowledge begins, and so spreads itself by degrees to generals. Locke.
A history painter paints man in general. Reynolds.

2. In general; in the main; for the most part; not always or universally.

I have shown that he excels, in general, under each of these heads. Addison.

3. The chief commander of an army. But, to distinguish this officer from other generals, he is often called general-in-chief. The officer second in rank is called lieutenant-general.
4. The commander of a division of an army or militia, usually called a major-general.
5. The commander of a brigade, called a brigadier-general.
6. A particular beat of drum or march, being that which, in the morning, gives notice for the infantry to be in readiness to march. Encyc.
7. The chief of an order of monks, or of all the houses or congregations established under the same rule. Encyc.
8. The public; the interest of the whole; the vulgar. [Not in use.] Shak.

GEN-ER-AL-IS'SI-MO, n. [It.] The chief commander of an army or military force.

2. The supreme commander; sometimes a title of honor; as, Alexander, generalissimo of Greece. Brown.

GEN-ER-AL'I-TY, n. [Fr. generalité; It. generalità.]

1. The state of being general; the quality of including species or particulars. Hooker.
2. The main body; the bulk; the greatest part; as, the generality of a nation, or of mankind. Addison.

GEN-ER-AL-I-ZĀ'TION, n. The act of making general; the act of reducing particulars to generals or to their genera.

GEN'ER-AL-IZE, v. t. To extend from particulars or species to genera, or to whole kinds or classes; to make general, or common to a number; as, to generalize a remark.

2. To reduce particulars to generals, or to their genus. Reid.

Copernicus generalized the celestial motions, by merely referring them to the moon's motion. Newton generalized them still more, by referring this last to the motion of a stone through the air. Nicholson.

GEN'ER-AL-IZ-ED, pp. Extended to generals; reduced to a genus.

GEN'ER-AL-IZ-ING, ppr. Extending to generals; reducing to genera.

GEN'ER-AL-LY, adv. In general; commonly; extensively, though not universally; most frequently, but not without exceptions. A hot summer generally follows a cold winter. Men are generally more disposed to censure than to praise, as they generally suppose it easier to depress excellence in others than to equal or surpass it by elevating themselves.

2. In the main; without detail; in the whole taken together.

Generally speaking, they live very quietly. Addison.

GEN'ER-AL-NESS, n. Wide extent, though short of universality; frequency; commonness. Sidney.

GEN'ER-AL-SHIP, n. The skill and conduct of a general officer; military skill in a commander, exhibited in the judicious arrangements of troops, or the operations of war.

GEN'ER-AL-TY, n. The whole; the totality. Hale.

GEN'ER-ANT, n. [L. generans.]

1. The power that generates; the power or principle that produces. Glanville. Ray.

2. In geometry, a line, surface, or solid, generated, or supposed to be generated, by the motion of a point, line, or surface. Barlow.

GEN'ER-ĀTE, v. t. [L. genero. See GENDER.]

1. To beget; to procreate; to propagate; to produce a being similar to the parent. Every animal generates his own species.

2. To produce; to cause to be; to bring into life; as, great whales which the waters generated. Milton.

3. To cause; to produce; to form.

Sounds are generated where there is no air at all. Bacon.
Whatever generates a quantity of good chyle must likewise generate milk. Arbuthnot.

In music, any given sound generates with itself its octave and two other sounds extremely sharp, viz., its twelfth above or the octave of its fifth, and the seventeenth above. Encyc.

GEN'ER-Ā-TED, pp. Begotten; engendered; procreated; produced; formed.

GEN'ER-Ā-TING, ppr. or a. Begetting; procreating; producing; forming.

GEN-ER-Ā'TION, n. The act of begetting; procreation, as of animals.

2. Production; formation; as, the generation of sounds, or of curves or equations.

3. A single succession in natural descent, as the children of the same parents; hence, an age. Thus we say, the third, the fourth, or the tenth generation. Gen. xv. 16.

4. The people of the same period, or living at the same time.

O faithless and perverse generation! — Luke ix.

5. Genealogy; a series of children or descendants from the same stock.

This is the book of the generations of Adam. — Gen. v.

6. A family; a race. Shak.

7. Progeny; offspring. Shak.

GEN'ER-Ā-TIVE, a. Having the power of generating or propagating its own species. Raleigh.

2. Having the power of producing. Bentley.

3. Prolific. Bentley.

GEN'ER-Ā-TOR, n. He or that which begets, causes, or produces.

2. In music, the principal sound or sounds by which others are produced. Thus the lowest C for the treble of the harpsichord, besides its octave, will strike an attentive ear with its twelfth above, or G in alt., and with its seventeenth above, or E in alt. Hence C is called their generator, the G and E its products or harmonics. Encyc.

3. A vessel in which steam is generated. Perkins.

GE-NER'IC, } a. [It. and Sp. generico; Fr. gene-
GE-NER'IC-AL, } rique; from L. genus.]

Pertaining to a genus or kind; comprehending the genus, as distinct from species, or from another genus. A generic description is a description of a genus; a generic difference is a difference in genus; a generic name is the denomination which comprehends all the species, as of animals, plants, or fossils, which have certain essential and peculiar characters in common. Thus Canis is the generic name of animals of the dog kind; Felis, of the cat kind; Cervus, of the deer kind

GE-NER'IC-AL-LY, adv. With regard to genus; as, an animal generically distinct from another, or two animals generically allied. Woodward.

GE-NER'IC-AL-NESS, n. The quality of being generic.

GEN'TLE-MAN, n. [gentle, that is, genteel, and man. So in Fr. gentilhomme, It. gentiluomo, Sp. gentilhombre. See GENTEEL.]

1. In its most extensive sense, in Great Britain, every man above the rank of yeoman, comprehending noblemen. In a more limited sense, a man who, without a title, bears a coat of arms, or whose ancestors have been freemen. In this sense, gentlemen hold a middle rank between the nobility and yeomanry.

2. In the United States, where titles and distinctions of rank do not exist, the term is applied to men of education and of good breeding, of every occupation. Indeed, this is also the popular practice in Great Britain. Hence,

3. A man of good breeding, politeness, and civil manners, as distinguished from the vulgar and clownish.

A plowman on his legs is higher than a gentleman on his knees. Franklin.

4. A term of complaisance. In the plural, the appellation by which men are addressed in popular assemblies, whatever may be their condition or character.

5. In Great Britain, the servant of a man of rank, who attends his person. Also, a prefix to his official title; as, gentleman usher, one who walks before his master and introduces strangers into his presence; gentleman server, one who serves up the feast. Camden.

GEN'TLE-MAN-COM'MON-ER, n. The highest class of commoners at Oxford University.

GEN'TLE-MAN-PEN'SION-ERS, n. pl. In England, a band of forty gentlemen, whose office it is to attend the king to and from the royal chapel. Buchanan.

GEN'U-INE, a. [L. genuinus, from genus, or its root. See GENDER.]

Native; belonging to the original stock; hence, real; natural; true; pure; not spurious, false, or adulterated. The Gaels are supposed to be genuine descendants of the Celts. Vices and crimes are the genuine effects of depravity, as virtue and piety are the genuine fruits of holiness. It is supposed we have the genuine text of Homer.

GEN'U-INE-LY, adv. Without adulteration or foreign admixture; naturally. Boyle.

GEN'U-INE-NESS, n. The state of being native, or of the true original; hence, freedom from adulteration or foreign admixture; freedom from any thing false or counterfeit; purity; reality; as, the genuineness of Livy's History; the genuineness of faith or repentance.

[Bishop Watson, in his Apology for the Bible, considers authenticity and genuineness to be quite distinct, the former referring to the correctness of the facts detailed, and the latter to the authorship of the book containing them; while, on the other hand, they are used by Bishop Marsh as synonymous.—E. H. B.]

GĒ'NUS, n.; pl. GEN'ERA. (It would be desirable to anglicize the plural into genuses.) [L. genus, Gr. γενος, Ir. gein, offspring, race, or family, Sans. jana; hence, kind, sort. See GENDER.]

1. In logic, that which has several species under it; a class of a greater extent than species; a universal which is predicable of several things of different species. Cyc.

2. In natural history, an assemblage of species possessing certain characters in common, by which they are distinguished from all others. It is subordinate to class and order, and in some arrangements, to tribe and family. A single species, possessing certain peculiar characters, which belong to no other species, may also constitute a genus; as the camelopard and the flamingo.

3. In botany, a genus consists of such a group or assemblage of species as agree both structurally and physiologically, as respects the organs of fructification, reproduction, or perpetuation, and at the same time have a general resemblance in habit.

GET, v. t.; pret. GOT, [GAT, obs.;] pp. GOT, GOTTEN. [Sax. getan, gytan, or geatan, to get; agytan, to know or understand; angitan, andgitan, to find, to understand. The Danish has forgietter, to forget, but gietter signifies to guess, or to suppose, to think; the Swedish also has förgäta, to forget, to give to oblivion, ex animo ejicere. The simple verb gietter, gäta, coincides with the D. gieten, G. giessen, to cast, to pour out, to found, as vessels of metal, Sax. geotan. To get, then, is, primarily, to throw, and with respect to acquisition, it is to rush on and seize. The Italian has cattare, to get; raccattare, to regain, to acquire. Qu. Sp. rescatar, Port. resgatar, to redeem, to ransom. See RESCUE.]
1. To procure; to obtain; to gain possession of, by almost any means. We get favor by kindness; we get wealth by industry and economy; we get land by purchase; we get praise by good conduct; and we get blame by doing injustice. The merchant should get a profit on his goods; the laborer should get a due reward for his labor; most men get what they can for their goods or for their services. Get differs from acquire, as it does not always express permanence of possession, which is the appropriate sense of acquire. We get a book or a loaf of bread by borrowing, we do not acquire it; but we get or
2. To have. [acquire an estate.

Thou hast got the face of a man. Herbert.

This is a most common, but gross abuse of this word. We constantly hear it said, I have got no corn, I have got no money, she has got a fair complexion, when the person means only, I have no corn, I have no money, she has a fair complexion.
3. To beget; to procreate; to generate. Locke.
4. To learn; as, to get a lesson.
5. To prevail on; to induce; to persuade.

Though the king could not get him to engage in a life of business. Spectator.

[This is not elegant.]
6. To procure to be. We could not get the work done. [Not elegant.]
To get off; to put off; to take or pull off; as, to get off a garment; also, to remove; as, to get off a ship from shoals.
2. To sell; to dispose of; as, to get off goods.
To get on; to put on; to draw or pull on; as, to get on a coat; to get on boots.
To get in; to collect and shelter; to bring under cover; as, to get in corn.
To get out; to draw forth; as, to get out a secret.
2. To draw out; to disengage.
To get the day; to win; to conquer; to gain the victory.
To get together; to collect; to amass.
To get over; to surmount; to conquer; to pass without being obstructed; as, to get over difficulties; also, to recover; as, to get over sickness.
To get above; to surmount; to surpass.
To get up; to prepare for coming before the public; to bring forward.
With a pronoun following, it signifies to betake; to remove; to go; as, get you to bed; get thee out of the land. But this mode of expression can hardly be deemed elegant.

GET, v. i. To arrive at any place or state; followed by some modifying word, and sometimes implying difficulty or labor; as,
To get away, or away from; to depart; to quit; to leave; or to disengage one's self from.

To get before; to arrive in front, or more forward.
To get behind; to fall in the rear; to lag.
To get back; to arrive at the place from which one departed; to return.
To get clear; to disengage one's self; to be released, as from confinement, obligation, or burden; also, to be freed from danger or embarrassment.
To get down; to descend; to come from an elevation.
To get home; to arrive at one's dwelling.
To get in or into; to arrive within an inclosure, or a mixed body; to pass in; to insinuate one's self.
To get loose or free; to disengage one's self; to be released from confinement.
To get off; to escape, to depart; to get clear; also, to alight; to descend from.
To get out; to depart from an inclosed place, or from confinement; to escape; to free one's self from embarrassment.
To get along; to proceed; to advance.
To get rid of; to disengage one's self from; also, to shift off; to remove.
To get together; to meet; to assemble; to convene.
To get up; to arise; to rise from a bed or a seat; also, to ascend; to climb.
To get through; to pass through and reach a point beyond any thing; also, to finish; to accomplish.
To get quit of; to get rid of; to shift off, or to disengage one's self from.
To get forward; to proceed; to advance; also, to prosper; to advance in wealth.
To get near; to approach within a small distance.
To get ahead; to advance; to prosper.
To get on; to proceed; to advance.
To get a mile or other distance; to pass over it in traveling.
To get at; to reach; to make way to.
To get asleep; to fall asleep.
To get drunk; to become intoxicated.
To get between; to arrive between.
To get to; to reach; to arrive.

bright light, it constantly reflects a reddish color; hence its name. It sometimes strongly resembles a translucid jelly. Cleaveland.

GIRD, (gurd,) n. [Sax. geard, or gyrd, or gyrda, a twig, branch, rod, pole, Eng. a yard; G. gurt, a girth, a girdle; Dan. gierde, a hedge, a rail. This word signifies, primarily, a twig, shoot, or branch; hence, a pole or stick used in measuring. In measuring land, among our Saxon ancestors, the gyrd seems to have been a certain measure like our rod, perch, or pole, all of which signify the same thing, a branch or shoot, a little pole. We now apply the word yard to a measure of three feet in length. In rude ages, gyrds, shoots of trees, were used for binding things together, whence the verb to gird. (See WITHE.) Gyrds were also used for driving, or for punishment, as we now use whips; and our common people use gird for a severe stroke of a stick or whip. See LYE, under GYRD and WEAL-STYLLING.]

1. A twitch or pang; a sudden spasm which resembles the stroke of a rod, or the pressure of a band.

2. In popular language, a severe stroke of a stick or whip.

GIRD, (gurd,) v. t.; pret. and pp. GIRDED or GIRT. [Sax. gyrdan; G. gürten; D. gorden; Sw. giorda, to gird or surround; Dan. gierder, to hedge, to inclose. (See the noun.) It is probable that garden, Ir. gort, is from the same root; originally, an inclosed field, a piece of ground surrounded with poles, stakes, and branches of trees. If the noun is the primary word, the sense of the root is to shoot, as a branch; if the verb is the root, the sense is to surround, or rather, to bind or make fast. The former is the most probable.]

1. To bind by surrounding with any flexible substance, as with a twig, a cord, bandage, or cloth; as, to gird the loins with sackcloth.

2. To make fast by binding; to put on; usually with on; as, to gird on a harness; to gird on a [sword.

Dimness or abolition of sight from opacity of the humors. J. M. Good.

"Glaucoma consists in a change of structure in the vitreous humor."

"Arthritic inflammation of the internal tunics of the eye (an inflammation commencing in parts most essential to the function of vision, in the retina, in the vitreous humor, and probably involving the choroid coat) has sometimes been called acute glaucoma, this term being derived from the greenish appearance of the eye. It has been called glaucoma from another symptom, which takes place where, without any enlargement of the vessels, without any very severe pain or absolute extinction of vision in the first place, the pupil exhibits the same greenish discoloration, a discoloration which obviously does not depend on a change in the crystalline lens; for it is more deeply seated; it occupies the fundus of the eye, and you can only see it by looking at it when you are standing directly before the patient, not by looking at the eye sideways. This is called glaucoma simply; and it appears to me to be a chronic form of the same affection as that to which the term acute glaucoma is given. This chronic form of glaucoma is important to be observed; for it is liable to be confounded with cataract." Lawrence, Lectures on Surgery.

GLAU-CŌ'MA-TOUS, a. Having the nature of glaucoma. P. Cyc.

and the primary sense seems to be, to open, to expand, to enlarge. So splendor is from the Celtic ysplan, open, clear, plain, L. planus; hence, bright, shining. Glory, then, is brightness, splendor. The L. floreo, to blossom, to flower, to flourish, is probably of the same family.]

1. Brightness; luster; splendor.

The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.
For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory. —2 Pet. i.

In this passage of Peter, the latter word glory refers to the visible splendor or bright cloud that overshadowed Christ at his transfiguration. The former word glory, though the same in the original, is to be understood in a figurative sense.

2. Splendor; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. — Matt. vi.

3. Praise ascribed in adoration; honor.

Glory to God in the highest. — Luke ii.

GLŌSE, GLŌS'ER. See GLOZE. [Coleridge.

GLOSS, n. [G. glosse, a gloss or comment; glotzen, to gleam, to glimmer. In Sax. glesan signifies to explain, to flatter, to gloze. From the Gr. γλωσσα, the tongue, and a strap, the L. has glossa a tongue, and interpretation. In Heb. גלח signifies to shine, but from the sense of smoothness; Syr.  galash, to peel, to shave, to make bald. Whether these words are all of one family, let the reader judge. The radical sense appears to be, to open, to make clear, and the sense of tongue is probably to extend. If the first letter is a prefix, the other letters, Ls, are the elements of Ir. leos, light, L. lustro, Eng. luster; and it is remarkable that in Russ. losk is luster, polish, and laskayu is to flatter. The Gr. γλωττα, in the Attic dialect, is a tongue, and in Swedish and German, glatt, Dan. glat, D. glad, is smooth.]

1. Brightness or luster of a body proceeding from a smooth surface; as, the gloss of silk; cloth is calendered to give it a gloss.

GNOS'TIC, (nos'tik,) n. [L. gnosticus; Gr. γνωστικος, from γινωσκω, to know.]

The Gnostics were a sect of philosophers that arose in the first ages of Christianity, who pretended they were the only men who had a true knowledge of the Christian religion. They formed for themselves a system of theology, agreeable to the philosophy of Pytnagoras and Plato, to which they accommodated their interpretations of Scripture. They held that all natures, intelligible, intellectual, and material, are derived by successive emanations from the infinite fountain of Deity. These emanations they called æons, αιωνες. These doctrines were derived from the Oriental philosophy. Encyc. Enfield.

found of a name given to the Supreme Being from the attribute of goodness. It is probably an idea too remote from the rude conceptions of men in early ages. Except the word Jehovah, I have found the name of the Supreme Being to be usually taken from his supremacy or power, and to be equivalent to lord or ruler, from some root signifying to press or exert force. Now, in the present case, we have evidence that this is the sense of this word; for, in Persic, goda is rendered dominus, possessor, princeps, as is a derivative of the same word. See Cast Lex. col. 231.]

1. The Supreme Being; Jehovah; the eternal and infinite Spirit, the Creator, and the Sovereign of the Universe.

GRAN'ITE, (gran'it,) n. [Fr. granit; It. granito, grained.]

In geology, an aggregate rock, composed of the minerals quartz, feldspar, and mica, or at least of two of these minerals, confusedly crystallized together. The texture is more or less finely granular. The grains vary in size from that of a pin's head to a mass of two or three feet; but usually the largest size is that of a nut. The color of granite is greatly diversified by the different colors and proportions of the component parts, and in general these stones are very hard. The most common colors are gray, grayish-white, and flesh-red. Dict. Nat. Hist. Kirwan.

GRAN'I-TEL, n. [dim. of granite.] A binary aggregate of minerals; a granitic compound containing two constituent parts, as quartz and feldspar, or quartz and shorl or hornblend. [Obs.] Kirwan.

Φορκυι δ' αυ Κητω Γραιας τεκε καλλιπαρηους,
Εκ γενετης πολιας· τας δη Γραιας καλεουσιν.
Hesiod. Theog. 270.

"Keto bore to Phorcus the Graiæ with fair cheeks, white from their birth, and hence they were called Graiæ." The Greek word γραια is rendered an old woman, and, in this passage of Hesiod, is supposed to mean certain deities. The probability is, that it is applied to an old woman, because she is gray. But the fable of Hesiod is easily explained by supposing the author to have had in his mind some imperfect account of the origin of the Greeks.]

1. White, with a mixture of black.

These gray and dun colors may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks. Newton.

2. White; hoary; as, gray hair. We apply the word to hair that is partially or wholly white.

[See GRAIN.] It seems, primarily, to denote the gravelly bottom of a river or lake, or of the sea, which shows the appropriate sense of the verb to ground, as used by seamen.]

The surface of land or upper part of the earth, without reference to the materials which compose it. We apply ground to soil, sand, or gravel, indifferently, but never apply it to the whole mass of the earth or globe, nor to any portion of it when removed. We never say a shovel full or a load of ground. We say under ground, but not under earth; and we speak of the globe as divided into land and water, not into ground and water. Yet ground, earth, and land, are often used synonymously. We say, the produce or fruits of the ground, of the earth, or of land. The water overflows the low ground, or the low land.

GUARD, (gärd,) v. t. [Fr. garder; Sp. and Port. guardar; It. guardare, to keep, preserve, defend; also, to look, to behold; Basque, gordi; W. gwara, to fend or guard, to fence, to play. The primary sense is, to strike, strike back, repel, beat down, or to turn back or stop; hence, to keep or defend, as by repelling assault or danger. The sense of seeing, looking, is secondary, from the sense of guarding, and we retain a similar application of the root of this word in beware; or it is from the sense of reaching, or casting the eye, or from turning the head. This is the English to ward. In W., gwar is secure, mild, placid, that is, set, fixed, held. It seems to be allied to G. wahr, true, L. verus; wahren, to keep, to last, to hold out; bewahren, to keep or preserve; bewahren, to verify, to confirm; D. waar, true; waaren, to keep, preserve, indemnify; waarande, a warren, and guarantee; waarison, a garrison; Dan. vaer, wary, vigilant, watching; Eng. ware, aware; Dan. værger, to guard, defend, maintain; vare, a guard, or watch, wares, merchandise; varer, to keep, last, endure; Sw. vara, to watch, and to be, to exist; Dan. være, to be; Sax. warian, werian, to guard, to defend, to be wary. The sense of existing implies extension or continuance. See REGARD and REWARD.]

1. To secure against injury, loss, or attack; to protect; to defend; to keep in safety. If the word is from gildan, gyldan, to pay, it denotes a debt contracted by an offense, a fine, and thence came the present signification.]

1. Criminality; that state of a moral agent which results from his actual commission of a crime or offense, knowing it to be a crime, or violation of law. To constitute guilt, there must be a moral agent enjoying freedom of will, and capable of distinguishing between right and wrong, and a wilful or intentional violation of a known law or rule of duty. The guilt of a person exists as soon as the crime is committed; but to evince it to others, it must be proved by confession, or conviction in due course of law. Guilt renders a person a debtor to the law, as it binds him to pay a penalty in money or suffering. Guilt, therefore, implies both criminality and liableness to punishment. Guilt may proceed either from a positive act, or breach of law, or from voluntary neglect of known duty.

2. Criminality, in a political or civil view; exposure to forfeiture or other penalty.

A ship incurs guilt by the violation of a blockade. Kent.

1. The concrete mucilage of vegetables; a concrete juice which exudes through the bark of trees, and thickens on the surface. It is soluble in water, to which it gives a viscous and adhesive quality. It is insoluble in alcohol, and coagulates in weak acids. When dry, it is transparent and brittle, not easily pulverized, and of an insipid or slightly saccharine taste. Gum differs from resin in several particulars, but custom has inaccurately given the name of gum to several resins and gum-resins, as gum-copal, gum-sandarach, gum-ammoniac, and others. The true gums are gum-arabic, gum-senegal, gum-tragacanth, and the gums of the peach, plum, and cherry trees, &c. Nicholson. Hooper.
2. A tree of the genus Nyssa, called, also, black gum and sour gum.
Gum-elastic, or Elastic-gum, [caoutchouc,] is a well known substance, obtained from a tree in America by incision. It is a white juice, which, when dry, becomes very tough and elastic, and is used for bottles, surgical instruments, for overshoes, &c. This substance is also much used for various other purposes, being perfectly impermeable to water. Nicholson. Encyc.
GUM, v. t. To smear with gum.
2. To unite by a viscous substance.
GUM-AR'A-BIC, n. A gum which flows from the Acacia, in Arabia, Egypt, &c.
GUM'-BOIL, n. A boil on the gum.
GUM-RES'IN, n. [See RESIN.] A name given to certain inspissated saps. A juice of plants, consisting of resin and various other substances, which have been taken for a gummy substance. The gum-resins do not flow naturally from plants, but are mostly extracted by incision, in the form of white, yellow, or red emulsive fluids, which dry and consolidate. The most important species are olibanum, galbanum, scammony, gamboge, euphorbium, asafetida, aloes, myrrh, and ammoniac. Fourcroy.
GUM-SEN'E-GAL, n. A gum resembling gum-arabic, brought from the country of the River Senegal, in Africa.
GUM-TRAG'A-CANTH, n. The gum of a thorny shrub of that name, in Crete, Asia, and Greece. Encyc.
GUM'-TREE, n. The popular name of the black gum, of the genus Nyssa, one of the largest trees of the Southern States. It bears a small blue fruit, which is the favorite food of the opossum. Most of the large trees become hollow, and hence gum-tree is the term to denote a hollow tree, in many of the Southern States. Bee-hives are extensively made from portions of these hollow trunks; and hence, in many places, bee-gum has become the term to denote a bee-hive.
GUM'BO, n. A dish of food made of young capsules of ocra, with salt and pepper, stewed and served with melted butter.
GUM'LAC, n. The resinous produce of an insect which deposits its eggs on the branches of a tree called bihar, in Assam, a country bordering on Thibet, and elsewhere in Asia. [See LAC.] Nicholson.

GY'VING, ppr. Putting on gyves.

H.

H is the eighth letter of the English alphabet. It is properly the representative of the Chaldee, Syriac, and Hebrew ה, which is the eighth letter in those alphabets. Its form is the same as the Greek H, eta. It is not strictly a vowel, nor an articulation, but the mark of a stronger breathing than that which precedes the utterance of any other letter. It is pronounced with an expiration of breath, which, preceding a vowel, is perceptible by the ear at a considerable distance. Thus harm and arm, hear and ear, heat and eat, are distinguished at almost any distance at which the voice can be heard. H is a letter sui generis, but as useful in forming and distinguishing words as any other.

In our mother tongue, the Anglo-Saxon, and other Teutonic dialects, h sometimes represents the L. c, and the Gr. κ; as in horn, L. cornu, Gr. κερας; hide, G. haut, Sw. hud, D. huid, Dan. hud, L. cutis; Sax. hlinian, L. clino, Gr. κλινω, to lean; L. celo, to conceal, Sax. helan, G. hehlen, Dan. hæler. In Latin, h sometimes represents the Greek χ; as in halo, Gr. χαλαω: hio, χαω. In the modern European languages, it represents other guttural letters.

In English, h is sometimes mute, as in honor, honest; also when united with g, as in right, fight, brought. In which, what, who, whom, and some other words in which it follows w, it is pronounced before it, hwich, hwat, &c. As a numeral in Latin, H denotes 200, and with a dash over it, H̄, 200,000.

As an abbreviation, in Latin, H. stands for homo, hæres, hora, &c.

HAL-LE-LŪ'IAH, } (hal-le-lū'yä,) n. [Heb. הללו יה,
HAL-LE-LŪ'JAH, } praise ye Jah or Jehovah, from הלל, to praise, that is, to throw, or raise the voice, to utter a loud sound. Ar. هل halla or ealla, to appear; to begin to shine, as the new moon; to exclaim; to exult; to sing; to rejoice; to praise or worship God. Gr. ελελευ, a shout in battle. It coincides in elements with howl, L. ululo.]

Praise ye Jehovah; give praise to God; a word used in songs of praise, or a term of rejoicing in solemn ascriptions of thanksgiving to God. It is used as a noun, or as an exclamation.

[This word is improperly written with j, in conformity with the German and other continental languages, in which j has the sound of y. But to pronounce the word with the English sound of j destroys its beauty. The like mistake of the sound of j in Jehovah, Jordan, Joseph, has perverted the true pronunciation, which was Yehovah, Yordan, Yoseph. This perversion must now be submitted to, but in Hallelujah it ought not to be tolerated.]

HAL'LIARD, } (hal'yard,) n. [from hale, haul.] A

HAN'A-PER, n. [Norm. hanap, a cup, a hamper; Sax. hnæp, G. napf, D. nap, Fr. hanap, Arm. hanaff, It. nappo, a bowl or cup. These seem to be all the same word, yet I see not how a cup and a basket should have the same name, unless the vessel was originally made of bark, and so tight as to hold liquors.]

The hanaper was used in early days, by the kings of England, for holding and carrying with them their money, as they journeyed from place to place. It was a kind of basket, like the fiscus, and hence came to be considered as the king's treasury. Hence, the clerk or warden of the hanaper, is an officer who receive the fees due to the king for seals of charters, patents, commissions, and writs. There is also an officer who is controller of the hanaper. This word, therefore, answered to the modern exchequer. Spelman.

HAN-SE-AT'IC, a. Pertaining to the Hanse Towns, or to their confederacy.

HANSE TOWNS. Hanse signifies a society; Goth. hansa, a multitude. The Hanse Towns, in Germany, were certain commercial cities which associated for the protection of commerce as early as the twelfth century. To this confederacy acceded certain commercial cities in Holland, England, France, Spain, and Italy, until they amounted to seventy-two; and for centuries this confederacy commanded the respect and defied the power of kings. It has now ceased to exist, and its remnants, Lubeck, Hamburg, Bremen, and Frankfort, are called Free Cities. Encyc. Am.

From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

4. By chance. [See HAPLY.]

HAP'PI-NESS, n. [from happy.] The agreeable sensations which spring from the enjoyment of good; that state of a being in which his desires are gratified by the enjoyment of pleasure without pain; felicity; but happiness usually expresses less than felicity, and felicity less than bliss. Happiness is comparative. To a person distressed with pain, relief from that pain affords happiness; in other cases, we give the name happiness to positive pleasure or an excitement of agreeable sensations. Happiness therefore admits of indefinite degrees of increase in enjoyment, or gratification of desires. Perfect happiness, or pleasure unalloyed with pain, is not attainable in this life.

2. Good luck; good fortune. Johnson.

3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.

For there's a happiness, as well as care. Pope.

Chemists have been more happy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.

So we say, a happy thought; a happy expedient.

2. Being in the enjoyment of agreeable sensations from the possession of good; enjoying pleasure from the gratification of appetites or desires. The pleasurable sensations derived from the gratification of sensual appetites render a person temporarily happy; but he only can be esteemed really and permanently happy, who enjoys pence of mind in the favor of God. To be in any degree happy, we must be free from pain both of body and of mind; to be very happy, we must be in the enjoyment of lively sensations of pleasure, either of body or mind.

Happy am I, for the daughters will call me blessed. — Gen. xxx.
He found himself happiest in communicating happiness to others. Wirt.

HAR'VEST, n. [Sax. hærfest, harfest, harvest, autumn; G. herbst; D. herfst. This word signifies autumn, and primarily had no reference to the collection of the fruits of the earth; but, in German, herbstzeit is harvest time. It seems to be formed from the G. herbe, harsh, keen, tart, acerb, L. acerbus, and primarily it refers to the cold, chilly weather in autumn, in the north of Europe. This being the time when crops are collected in northern climates, the word came to signify harvest.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering in corn or other crops. It especially refers to the time of collecting corn or grain, which is the chief food of men, as wheat and rye. In Egypt and Syria, the wheat harvest is in April and May; in the south of Europe and of the United States, in June; in the Northern States of America, in July; and in the north of Europe, in August and September. In the United States, the harvest of maize is mostly in October.

2. The ripe corn or grain collected and secured in barns or stacks. The harvest this year is abundant.

3. The product of labor; fruit or fruits.

Let us the harvest of our labor eat. Dryden.

4. Fruit or fruits; effects; consequences. He that sows iniquity will reap a harvest of woe.

5. In Scripture, harvest signifies, figuratively, the proper season for business.

4. Lofty; bold; of high hazard; as, a haughty enterprise. [Obs.] Spenser.

HAUL, v. t. [Fr. haler; Arm. hala; Sp. halar; D.

Digitized by Google

haalen. It is sometimes written hale, but haul is preferable, as au represents the broad sound of a.]

1. To pull or draw with force; to drag; as, to haul a heavy body along on the ground; to haul a boat on shore. Haul is equivalent to drag, and differs sometimes from pull and draw, in expressing more force and labor. It is much used by seamen; as, to haul down the sails; haul in the boom; haul aft, &c.

2. To drag; to compel to go.

When applied to persons, haul implies compulsion or rudeness, or both.

To haul the wind, in seamanship, is to turn the head of the ship nearer to the point from which the wind blows, by arranging the sails more obliquely, bracing the yards more forward, hauling the sheets more aft, &c. Mar. Dict.

HAUL, n. A pulling with force; a violent pull. Thomson.

2. A draft of a net; as, to catch a hundred fish at a haul.

HAUL'ED, (hawld,) pp. Pulled with force; dragged; compelled to move.

HAUL'ING, ppr. Drawing by force or violence; dragging.

HAULM, } (hawm,) n. [Sax. healm; G. D. Sw. and HAUM, } Dan. halm; Fr. chaume; L. culmus, the stalk of corn. The sense is probably that which is set, or a shoot. It seems to be the W. colov, a stem or stalk, whence columna, a column.]

1. The stem or stalk of grain, of all kinds, or of pease, beans, hops, &c.

2. Straw; the dry stalks of corn, &c., in general.

HAUNCH, n. [Fr. hanche; Arm. hoinch; Sp. It. and Port. anca.]

1. The hip; that part of the body of man and of quadrupeds which lies between the last ribs and the thigh. Encyc.

A dry cough. [Obs.] Ray.

HAUS'TEL-LATE, a. Provided with a haustellum or sucker, as certain insects.

HAUT'BOY, (hō'boy,) n. [Fr. haut, high, and bois, wood, or a shoot.]

1. A wind instrument, somewhat resembling a flute, but widening toward the bottom, and sounded through a reed. The treble is two feet long. The tenor goes a fifth lower, when blown open. It has only eight holes; but the base, which is five feet long, has eleven. Encyc.

2. A sort of strawberry. [The name belongs to the strawberry.]

HAU-TEUR', (ho-tūre', or ho-tāur',) n. [Fr.] Pride; haughtiness; haughty manner or spirit.

HAUT GOUT', (ho-goo',) [Fr.] High relish or taste.

2. High seasoning.

HAU'YNE, (how'in,) n. A mineral, named from the French mineralogist Haüy, occurring in grains or small masses, and also in groups of minute, shining crystals. Its color is blue, of various shades. It is found imbedded in volcanic rocks, basalt, clinkstone, &c. Cleaveland.

HAVE, (hav,) v. t.; pret. and pp. HAD. Indic. present, I have, thou hast, he has; we, ye, they have. [Sax. habban; Goth. haban; G. haben; D. hebben; Sw. hafva; Dan. haver; L. habeo; Sp. haber; Port. haver; It. avere; Fr. avoir; W. hafiaw, to snatch or seize hastily, and hapiaw, to happen. The Spanish haber unites have with happen; haber, to have or possess, to take, to happen or befall. The primary sense, then, is, to fall on, or to rush on and seize. See HAPPEN. Class Gb, No. 74, 79.]

1. To possess; to hold in possession or power.

How many loaves have ye? Matt. xv.
He that gathered much had nothing over. — Ex. xvi.
I have a Levite to my priest. — Judges xvii.

To have and to hold; terms in a deed of conveyance.

2. To possess, as something that is connected with, or belongs to, one.

Have ye a father? Have ye another brother? — Gen. xliii. and xliv.
Sheep that have no shepherd. — 1 Kings xxii.

3. To marry; to take for a wife or husband.

In the resurrection, whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her. — Matt. xxii.

4. To hold; to regard. Thus, to have in honor, is, to hold in esteem; to esteem; to honor.

To have in derision or contempt; to hold in derision or contempt; to deride; to despise.

5. To maintain; to hold in opinion.

Sometimes they will have them to be the natural heat; sometimes they will have them to be the qualities of the tangible parts. Bacon.

6. To be urged by necessity or obligation; to be under necessity, or impelled by duty. I have to visit twenty patients every day. We have to strive against temptations. We have to encounter strong prejudices. The nation has to pay the interest of an immense debt.

7. To seize and hold; to catch. The hound has him. [The original, but now a vulgar use of the word.]

8. To contain. The work has many beauties and many faults.

9. To gain; to procure; to receive; to obtain; to purchase. I had this cloth very cheap. He has a guinea a month. He has high wages for his services.

10. To bring forth, to produce, as a child.

Had rather, denotes wish or preference.

I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than dwell in the tents of wickedness. — Ps. lxxxiv.

Is not this phrase a corruption of would rather?

To have after; to pursue. [Not much used, nor elegant.] Shak.

To have away; to remove; to take away. Tusser.

To have at; to encounter; to assail; as, to have at him; to have at you. [Legitimate, but vulgar.]

To enter into competition with; to make trial with. Shak.

Have with you, is, have one with you; let us go together. Shak.

To have in; to contain.

To have on; to wear; to carry, as raiment or weapons.

He saw a man who had not on a wedding garment. — Matt. xxii.

To have out; to cause to depart. 2 Sam. xiii.

To have a care; to take care; to be on the guard, or to guard.

To have pleasure; to enjoy.

To have pain; to suffer.

To have sorrow; to be grieved or afflicted.

With would and should.

He would have; he desires to have, or he requires.

He should have; he ought to have.

But the various uses of have in such phrases, and its uses as an auxiliary verb, are fully explained in grammars. As an auxiliary, it assists in forming the perfect tense; as, I have formed, thou hast formed, he hath or has formed, we have formed; and the prior-past tense; as, I had seen, thou hadst seen, he had seen.

["To have and to be. The distinction is marked in a beautiful sentiment of a German poet — Hast thou any thing? Share it with me, and I will pay thee the worth of it. Art thou any thing? O, then, let us exchange souls."
Dr. Southey's Omniana, i. 237. — E. H. B.]

HA'ZY, a. [See HAZE.] Thick with vapor, but not as damp as in foggy weather; as, hazy weather; the hazy north. Thomson. Totton.

HE, pronoun of the third person; nom. he; poss. his; obj. him. [Sax. mas. he; fem. heo; neut. hit, now contracted to it, L. id, for hid. It seems to be a contracted word, for the L. is hic, and the Saxon accusative is sometimes hig. In English it has no plural, but it has in Saxon hi, they.]

1. A pronoun, a substitute for the third person, masculine gender, representing the man or male person named before.

Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee. —Gen. iii.

Thou shalt fear Jehovah thy God; him shalt thou serve.—Deut. x.

2. It often has reference to a person that is named in the subsequent part of the sentence. He is the man.

3. He is often used without reference to any particular person, and may be referred to any person indefinitely that answers the description. It is then synonymous with any man.

He that walketh with wise men shall be wise. — Prov. xiii.

4. He, when a substitute for man, in its general sense, expressing mankind, is of common gender, representing, like its antecedent, the whole human race.

My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh. — Gen. vi.

5. Man; a male.

I stand to answer thee, or any he the proudest of thy sort. Shak.

In this use of he, in the ludicrous style, the word has no variation of case. In the foregoing sentence, he is in the objective case, or position, and the word is to be considered as a noun.

6. He is sometimes prefixed to the names of animals to designate the male kind; as, a he-goat, a he-bear. In such cases, he is to be considered as an adjective, or the two words as forming a compound.

HEAD, (hed,) n. [Sax. heafod, hefed, heafd; D. hoofd; Dan. hoved; Sw. hufvud; G. haupt. This word is a participle of the Sax. heafan, hefan, to heave, pret. hof, hove; G. heben, hob, &c. Heafod, heaved, the elevated part, the top. Class Gb.]

1. The uppermost part of the human body, or the foremost part of the body of prone and creeping animals. This part of the human body contains the organs of hearing, seeing, tasting, and smelling; it contains also the brain, which is supposed to be the sent of the intellectual powers, and of sensation. Hence the head is the chief or most important part, and is used for the whole person, in the phrase, Let the evil fall on my head.

2. An animal; an individual; as, the tax was raised by a certain rate per head. And we use the singular number to express many. The herd contains twenty head of oxen.

Thirty thousand head of swine. Addison.

3. A chief; a principal person: a leader; a commander; one who has the first rank or place, and to whom others are subordinate; as, the head of an army; the head of a sect or party. Eph. v.

4. The first place; the place of honor, or of command. The lord mayor sat at the head of the table. The general marched at the head of his troops.

5. Countenance; presence; in the phrases, to hide the head, to show the head.

6. Understanding; faculties of the mind; sometimes in a ludicrous sense; as, a man has a good head, or a strong head. These men laid their heads together to form the scheme. HEAT, n. [Sax. heat, hæt; D. hitte; G. hitze; Sw. hetta; D. hede; L. æstus, for hæstus, or cæstus. See the verb.]

1. Heat, as a cause of sensation, is considered by some to be the result of the vibration of elastic media, by others as a subtile fluid, contained in a greater or less degree in all bodies. In modern chemistry, it is called caloric. It expands all bodies in different proportions, and is the cause of fluidity and evaporation. A certain degree of it is also essential to animal and vegetable life. Heat is latent, when so combined with other matter as not to be perceptible. It is sensible, when it is evolved and perceptible. Lavoisier. Encyc.

2. Heat, as a sensation, is the effect produced on the sentient organs of animals, by the passage of caloric, disengaged from surrounding bodies, to the organs. When we touch or approach a hot body, the caloric or heat passes from that body to our organs of feeling, and gives the sensation of heat. On the contrary, when we touch a cold body, the caloric passes from the hand to that body, and causes a sensation of cold. Lavoisier.

Note. — This theory of heat seems not to be fully settled.

3. Hot air; hot weather; as, the heat of the tropical climates.

4. Any accumulation or concentration of the matter of heat or caloric; as, the heat of the body; the heat of a furnace; a red heat; a white heat; a welding heat.

5. The greatest accumulation of heat, or the time of such accumulation; as, in the heat of the day.

6. The state of being once heated or hot. Give the iron another heat.

7. A violent action unintermitted; a single effort.

Many causes are required for refreshment between the heats. Dryden.

8. A single effort in running; a course at a race. Hector won at the first heat.

9. Redness of the face; flush. Addison.

10. Animal excitement; violent action or agitation of the system. The body is all in a heat.

11. Utmost violence; rage; vehemence; as, the heat of battle.

12. Violence; ardor; as, the heat of party.

13. Agitation of mind; inflammation or excitement; exasperation; as, the heat of passion.

14. Ardor; fervency; animation in thought or discourse.

With all the strength and heat of eloquence. Addison.

15. Fermentation.

HEAT, v. t. [Sax. hatan, to call, to order, command, or promise; gehatan, to call, to promise, to grow warm; hætan, to heat, to command, to call; gehætan, to promise; hæse, order, command; bchæs, a vow; behætan, to vow; onhætan, to heat, to inflame; hatian, to heat, to be hot, to boil, to hate; hæt, heat, heat; hat, hot; hate, hatred, hate; L. odi, osus, for hodi, hosus; Goth. hatyan, to hate; haitan, gahaitan, to call, to command, to vow or promise; G. heiss, hot; heissen, to call; heitzen, to heat; hitze, heat, ardor, vehemence; gcheiss, command; verheissen, to promise; hass, hate; hassen, to hate; D. heet, hot, eager, hasty; hitte, heat, heeten, to heat, to name or call, to be called, to command; haat, hate; haaten, to hate; verhitten, to inflame; Sw. het, hot; hetta, heat, passion; hetta, to be hot, to glow; heta, to be called or named; hat, hate, hatred; hata, to hate; Dan. heed, hot; hede, heat, ardor; heder, to heat, to be called or named; had, hate; hader, to hate. With these words coincides the L. æstus, for hæstus, heat, tide, Gr. $\alpha\iota\theta\omega$, to burn, and the English haste and hoist are probably of the same family. The primary and literal sense of all these words is, to stir, to rouse, to raise, to agitate, from the action of driving, urging, stimulating, whence Sw. hetsa, Dan. hedser, to excite, to set on dogs. See Class Gd, No. 39, and others. It may be further added, that in W. cas is hatred, a castle, from the sense of separating; casau, to hate; and if this is of the same family, it unites castle with the foregoing words. In these words we see the sense of repulsion.]

1. To make hot; to communicate heat to, or cause to be hot; as, to heat an oven or a furnace; to heat iron.

2. To make feverish; as, to heat the blood.

3. To warm with passion or desire; to excite; to rouse into action.

A noble emulation heats your breast. Dryden.

4. To agitate the blood and spirits with action; to excite animal action. Dryden.

HEAT, v. i. To grow warm or hot by fermentation, or extrication of latent heat. Green hay heats in a mow, and green corn in a bin.

2. To grow warm or hot. The iron or the water heats slowly.

HEAT, for HEATED, used by Shakspeare and Ben Jonson, is still sometimes used, and pronounced het; but it is not elegant.

HĒAT'ED, pp. or a. Made hot; inflamed; exasperated.

HĒA'THEN, (hē'thn,) n. [Sax. hæthen; G. heide, heath, and a heathen or pagan; D. heiden; Dan. and Sw. hedning; Gr. $\epsilon\theta\nu o\varsigma$; from heath, that is, one who lives in the country or woods, as pagan from pagus, a village.]

1. A pagan; a Gentile; one who worships idols, or is unacquainted with the true God. In the Scriptures, the word seems to comprehend all nations except the Jews or Israelites, as they were all strangers to the true religion, and all addicted to idolatry. The word may now be applied, perhaps, to all nations, except to Christians and Mohammedans.

Heathen, without the plural termination, is used plurally or collectively, for Gentiles or heathen nations.

Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance. — Ps. ii.

Heathen, however, has a plural, expressing two or more individuals.

If men have reason to be heathens in Japan. Locke.

To heave to; to bring the ship's head to the wind, and stop her motion.

To heave up; to relinquish; [so to throw up;] as, to heave up a design. [Vulgar.]

HĒAVE, (heev,) v. i. To swell, distend, or dilate; as, a horse heaves in panting. Hence,

2. To pant; to breathe with labor or pain; as, he heaves for breath. Dryden.

3. To keck; to make an effort to vomit.

4. To rise in billows, as the sea; to swell.

5. To rise; to be lifted; as, a ship heaves.

6. To rise or swell, as the earth at the breaking up of frost.

To heave in sight; to appear; to make its first appearance; as, a ship at sea, or as a distant object approaching or being approached.

We observe that this verb has often the sense of rising or rising in an arch or circular form, as in throwing and in distention, and from this sense is derived its application to the apparent arch over our heads, heaven.

HĒAVE, (heev,) n. A rising or swell; an exertion or effort upward.

None could guess whether the next heave of the earthquake would settle or swallow them. Dryden.

HEC'TOR-ING, ppr. Bullying; blustering; vexing.

["The epithet of a hectoring fellow is a more familiar instance of a participle similarly formed, though strangely distorted in its use to express a meaning almost the opposite of its original. The Hector of Homer unites, we know,

'The mildest manners with the bravest mind.'

The sole bulwark of Troy, he reveres the opinion of her citizens; armed, and hastening to the battle, he stops to caress his infant, and to soothe the afflictions of its mother; to his brother's faults he is indulgent; and Helen herself witnesses, over his grave, that she had never heard from him one accent of unkindness, or censed to be protected from the reproach of others by his mild speech and kindly dispositions:

Σὴ τ' αγανοφροσύνη, καὶ σοῖς ἀγνωσὶ ἐπέσσι."

Nugæ Metricæ, an unpublished work by Lord Grenville, 1824, p. 86. — E. H. B.]

HEIR, (āre,) n. [Norm. hier, here, Arm hear, haer; Sw. heredero; Port. herdeiro; Fr. heritier; It. erede; L. hæres, hæredis, from the verb, Eth. ወረሰ waras, Heb. ירש, Ar. ورث warata, to become an heir, to inherit. The primary sense is, to seize, or to rush on and take, or to expel and dispossess others, and take their property, according to the practice of rude nations. We observe, in the Hebrew and Ethiopic, the last consonant is a sibilant, as in the Latin nominative; but the oblique cases in the Latin correspond with the Arabic word, whose final consonant is a dental. This word may be connected with the Gr. αἱρεω, to take. See Class Rd, No. 51, 52, 68.]

1. The man who succeeds, or is to succeed, another in the possession of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, by descent; the man on whom the law casts an estate of inheritance by the death of the ancestor or former possessor; or the man in whom the title to an estate of inheritance is vested by the operation of law, on the death of a former owner.

We give the title to a person who is to inherit after the death of an ancestor, and during his life, as well as to the person who has actually come into possession. A man's children are his heirs. In most monarchies, the king's eldest son is heir to the throne; and a nobleman's eldest son is heir to his title.

Lo, one born in my house is my heir. — Gen. xv.

2. One who inherits or takes from an ancestor. The son is often heir to the disease or to the miseries of the father.

3. One who succeeds to the estate of a former possessor. Jer. xlix. Mic. i.

4. One who is entitled to possess. In Scripture, saints are called heirs of the promise, heirs of righteousness, heirs of salvation, &c., by virtue of the death of Christ, or of God's gracious promises. Rom. viii.

HEIR, (āre,) v. t. To inherit; to take possession of an estate of inheritance, after the death of the ancestor. Dryden.

HEIR-AP-PAR'ENT, n. The man who, during the life of his ancestor, is entitled to succeed to his estate or crown.

HEIR'DŌM, (āre'dum,) n. Succession by inheritance. Burke.

HEIR'ESS, (ār'ess,) n. A female heir; a female that inherits, or is entitled to inherit, an estate; an inheritrix.

HEIR'LESS, (āre'less,) n. Destitute of an heir.

HEIR'-LOOM, (āre'loom,) n. [heir and Sax. loma, geloma, andloman, utensils, vessels.]

Any furniture, movable, or personal chattel, which by law descends to the heir with the house or freehold, as tables, cupboards, bedsteads, &c. Eng. Law.

HEIR'-PRE-SUMP'TIVE, n. One who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would be heir, but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by any contingency, as by the birth of a nearer relative. Encyc.

Whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even from your lusts? — James iv.

4. From this source, or original.

All other faces borrowed hence. Suckling.

Hence signifies from this, and from, before hence, is not strictly correct. But from hence is so well established by custom, that it may not be practicable to correct the use of the phrase.

Hence is used elliptically and imperatively, for go hence; depart hence; away; begone.

Hence with your little ones. Shak.

Hence, as a verb, to send off, as used by Sidney, is improper.

HENCE-FORTH', (hens-förth',) adv. From this time forward.

I never from thy side henceforth will stray. Milton.

HEP'TARCH-IST, / HEP'TARCH, n. A ruler of one division of a heptarchy. Warton.

HEP'TARCH-Y, n. [Gr. ἑπτα, seven, and αρχη, rule.]

A government by seven persons, or the country governed by seven persons. But the word is usually applied to England, when under the government of seven kings, or divided into seven kingdoms; as, the Saxon heptarchy, which comprehended the whole of England, when subject to seven independent princes. These petty kingdoms were those of Kent, the South Saxons, [Sussex,] West Saxons, East Saxons, [Essex,] the East Angles, Mercia, and Northumberland. Hist. of England.

HEP'TA-TEUCH, (-tūke,) n. [Gr. ἑπτα, seven, and τευχος, book.]

The first seven books of the Old Testament.

HEP'-TREE, n. The wild dog-rose, a species of Rosa, the Rosa canina.

HER, (hur;) an adjective, or pronominal adjective,

Digitized by Google

of the third person. [Sax. hire, sing., heora, pl., the possessive case of he, heo; but more properly, an adjective, like the L. suus.]

1. Belonging to a female; as, her face; her head.

2. It is used before neuter nouns in personification.

Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. — Prov. iii.

Her is also used as a pronoun, or substitute for a female, in the objective case, after a verb or preposition.

She gave also to her husband with her, and he did eat. — Gen. iii.

Hers is primarily the objective or genitive case, denoting something that belongs to a female. But it stands as a substitute in the nominative or objective case.

And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend. Dryden.

Here hers stands for her fortune; but it must be considered as the nominative to could mend. I will take back my own book, and give you hers. Here hers is the object after give.

HER'ALD, n. [Fr. heraut, for herault; Arm. herald, or harod; Sp. heraldo; Port. arauto; It. araldo; G. herold; W. herodyr, embassador and herald, from herawd, a defiance or challenge, heriaw, to brandish, to threaten, from her, a push, a motion of defiance, a challenge. The primary sense is, to send, thrust, or drive.]

1. An officer whose business was to denounce or proclaim war, to challenge to battle, to proclaim peace, and to bear messages from the commander of an army. Hence,

2. A proclaimer; a publisher; as, the herald of another's fame.

HERD, n. [Sax. herd, heord; G. herde; Sw. and Dan. hiord; Basque, ardi. Words of this kind have for their primary sense, collection, assemblage. So in Saxon, here is an army. It may be from driving, W. gyr, or her.]

1. A collection or assemblage; applied to beasts when feeding or driven together. We say, a herd of horses, oxen, cattle, camels, elephants, bucks, harts, and, in Scripture, a herd of swine. But we say, a flock of sheep, goats, or birds. A number of cattle going to market is called a drove.

2. A company of men or people, in contempt or detestation; a crowd; a rabble; as, a vulgar herd.

HERD, n. [Sax. hyrd; G. hirt; Sw. herde; Dan. hyrde, or hyre; from the same root as the preceding, that is, the holder or keeper.]

A keeper of cattle; used by Spenser, and still used in Scotland, but in English now seldom or never used, except in composition; as, a shepherd, a goatherd, a swineherd.

HERD, v. i. To unite or associate, as beasts; to feed or run in collections. Most kinds of beasts manifest a disposition to herd.

2. To associate; to unite in companies customarily.

3. To associate; to become one of a number or party. Walsh.

HERD'ING, ppr. Associating in companies.

HERDS'-GRASS, n. A name given to various grasses which are highly esteemed for hay, particularly Timothy, (Phleum pratense,) Fox Tail, (Alopecurus pratensis,) and Red Top, (Agrostis vulgaris.)

HERDS'MAN, n. A keeper of herds; one employed in tending herds of cattle.

2. Formerly, the owner of a herd. [Formerly spelt HERDMAN.] Sidney.

HERE, adv. [Goth. her; Sax. her; G. and D. hier; Sw. här; Dan. her. It denotes, this place.]

1. In this place; in the place where the speaker is present; opposed to there. Behold, here am I. Lodge here this night. Build here seven altars. Scripture.

2. In the present life or state.

Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.

3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.

Then here's for earnest. Dryden.

4. In drinking health.

It is neither here nor there; it is neither in this place nor in that; neither in one place nor in another.

Here and there: in one place and another; in a dispersed manner or condition; thinly; or irregularly.

HERE'A-BOUT, } [comp., here and about.] About HERE'A-BOUTS, } this place. Addison.

HERE-AFT'ER, [comp. here and after.] In time to come; in some future time.

2. In a future state.

HERE-AFT'ER, n. A future state.

'Tis Heaven itself that points out a hereafter. Addison.

HERE-AT', [comp. here and at.] At this. He was offended hereat, that is, at this saying, this fact, &c.

HERE-BY', [comp. here and by.] By this.

Hereby we became acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.

HERE-IN', [comp. here and in.] In this.

Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit. — John xv.

HERE-IN-TŌ, [comp. here and into.] Into this. Hooker.

HERE-OF', (heer-off',) [comp. here and of.] Of this; from this.

Hereof comes it that Prince Harry is valiant. Shak.

HERE-ON', [comp. here and on.] On this. Brown.

HERE-OUT', [comp. here and out.] Out of this place. Spenser.

HERE-TŌ', } [comp. here and unto or to.] To this.
HERE-UN-TŌ', } Hooker.

HERE-TO-FORE', [comp. here and tofore.] In times before the present; formerly. Sidney.

HERE-UP-ON', [comp. here and upon.] On this.

HERE-WITH', [comp. here and with.] With this.

Most of the compounds, of here and a preposition, are obsolete or obsolescent, or at least are deemed inelegant. But hereafter and heretofore are in elegant use. Herein and hereby are frequently used in the present version of the Scriptures, and ought not, perhaps, to be discarded. Indeed, some of these words seem to be almost indispensable in technical law language.

HE-RED'IT-A-BLE, a. [from the root of heir; L. hæreditas.] That may be inherited. [Not much used.] [See INHERITABLE.] Locke.

HE-RED'IT-A-BLY, adv. By inheritance; by right of descent.

The one-house-owners belong hereditably to no private persons. Tooke, Russ. Encyc.

HER-E-DIT'A-MENT, n. [L. hæres, hæredium. See HEIR.] Any species of property that may be inherited; lands, tenements, any thing corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed, that may descend to an heir. Blackstone.

A corporeal hereditament is visible and tangible; an incorporeal hereditament is an ideal right, existing in contemplation of law, issuing out of substantial corporeal property.

HE-RED'IT-A-RI-LY, adv. By inheritance; by descent from an ancestor. Pope.

HE-RED'IT-A-RY, a. [Fr. hereditaire; It. creditario. See HEIR.]

Digitized by Google

HER-E-SI-OG'RA-PHY, n. A treatise on heresy.

HER'E-SY, n. [Gr. αἵρεσις, from αἱρεω, to take, to hold; L. hæresis; Fr. heresie.]

1. A fundamental error in religion, or an error of opinion respecting some fundamental doctrine of religion. But in countries where there is an established church, an opinion is deemed heresy when it differs from that of the church. The Scriptures being the standard of faith, any opinion that is repugnant to its doctrines is heresy; but as men differ in the interpretation of Scripture, an opinion deemed heretical by one body of Christians may be deemed orthodox by another. In Scripture and primitive usage, heresy meant merely sect, party, or the doctrines of a sect, as we now use denomination or persuasion, implying no reproach.

2. Heresy, in law, is an offense against Christianity, consisting in a denial of some of its essential doctrines, publicly avowed, and obstinately maintained. Blackstone.

3. An untenable or unsound opinion or doctrine in politics. Swift.

HER'E-TIC, n. [Gr. αἱρετικος; It. eretico; Fr. heretique.]

1. A person under any religion, but particularly the Christian, who holds and teaches opinions repugnant to the established faith, or that which is made the standard of orthodoxy. In strictness, among Christians, a person who holds and avows religious opinions contrary to the doctrines of Scripture, the only rule of faith and practice.

2. Any one who maintains erroneous opinions. Shak.

HE-RET'IC-AL, a. Containing heresy; contrary to the established faith, or to the true faith.

HE-RET'IC-AL-LY, adv. In a heretical manner; with heresy.

HE-RET'IC-ATE, v. t. To decide to be heresy.

HER'E-TOG, } n. [Sax. heretoga, here, an army, and HER'E-TOCH, } teache, a leader, from teogan, teon, to lead, L. duco, dux, Eng. to tug.]

Among our Saxon ancestors, the leader or commander of an army, or the commander of the militia in a county or district. This officer was elected by the people in folkmote.

HER'I-OT, n. [Sax. heregeat; here, army, and geat, tribute, supply, from geotan, to flow, to render.]

In English law, a tribute or fine payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner, landholder, or vassal. Originally, this tribute consisted of military furniture, or of horses and arms, as appears by the laws of Canute, C. 69. But as defined by modern writers, a heriot is a customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner of the land; or a render of the best beast, or other movables, to the lord, on the death of the tenant. Heriots were of two sorts; heriot service, which was due by reservation in a grant or lease of lands; and heriot custom, which depended solely on immemorial usage. Wilkins. Spelman. Blackstone.

HER'I-OT-A-BLE, a. Subject to the payment of a heriot. Burn.

HER'IS-SON, n. [Fr., a hedgehog, from herisser, to bristle, to stand out as hair.]

In fortification, a beam or bar armed with iron spikes pointed outward, and turning on a pivot, used to block up a passage. Encyc.

HER'IT-A-BLE, a. [from the root of heir, L. hæres.]

1. Capable of inheriting or taking by descent.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable. Hale.

2. That may be inherited. [This is the true sense.]

3. Annexed to estates of inheritance. In Scots law, heritable rights are all rights that affect lands or other immovables. Encyc. Blackstone.

HER'IT-AGE, n. [Fr., from the root of heir.]

1. Inheritance; an estate that passes from an ancestor to an heir by descent or course of law; that which is inherited. In Scots law, it sometimes signifies immovable estate, in distinction from movable.

2. In Scripture, the saints or people of God are called his heritage, as being claimed by him, and the objects of his special care. 1 Pet. v.
